Dredd ★★★ Weirdly pedigreed for such a down-and-dirty B-picture, Dredd was scripted by novelist Alex Garland and shot by groundbreaking cinematographer Antony Dod Mantle. For a movie that consists mostly of people getting shot in the face, it's much wittier than expected. As the title character, a sneering, killing machine in a post-apocalyptic dystopia, Karl Urban's performance is particularly droll. Eyes obscured by doofy-looking headgear, working strictly with a scowl and often hilariously rigid body language, he makes that Robocop reboot that's in the works seem awfully unnecessary. There's a perverse integrity to Dredd's nastiness. You'll keep waiting for them to try and soften up the character, or maybe just stop blowing people's heads off. No dice. Olivia Thirlby, working by Urban's side and doing a passable Milla Jovovich imitation, is on hand to supply the inevitable crisis of conscience, ever so slightly acknowledging that this is all just a queasy police-brutality–empowerment fantasy. But as far as such things go, it's kind of a hoot. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

End of Watch ★ ½ Training Day screenwriter David Ayer's third directorial effort unfortunately attempts to yoke his hard-boiled cop routine to that ever-wearying found-footage craze. The gimmick here is that beat cop Brian Taylor (Jake Gyllenhaal) is taking a night class in documentary filmmaking, so he and partner Mike Zavala (Michael Peña) wear buttonhole video cameras in their uniform pockets, and the whole movie jerks around in a fish-eyed, low resolution blur. Trying to follow the action made me so nauseated, I had to take a break halfway through and walk around the lobby just to keep from throwing up. Gyllenhaal and Peña have a relaxed rapport behind the wheel of a squad car, even if the baby-faced Gyllenhaal is never remotely credible as a steroidal knucklehead. Grandiose cartel baddies carry gold-plated AK-47s, conveniently videotaping their crimes for no other reason than that the movie needs us to see them. Improbable set-pieces and overscaled shoot-outs ensue, with the jagged YouTube aesthetic only underlining the phoniness of all these Hollywood clichés. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Expendables 2 ★★★ Of course it's garbage. Though the original was a surprise smash in 2010, Sylvester Stallone makes the sequel—a throwback to pre-CGI days, when manly men delivered terrible one-liners while laying waste to foreign countries—with an unnecessary gloss. The appeal of the first Expendables had a lot to do with Stallone's low-rent filmmaking style, but here he's handed the reins to Con Air director Simon West, who puts far too much of a slick Hollywood polish on the proceedings. Yet my heart still swelled with joy when I watched the icons of my youth blowing stuff up, shredding henchmen with automatic weapon fire and stealing each other's catchphrases. Like I said, garbage, but my favorite kind of garbage. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

For a Good Time, Call... ★ ½ Don't expect anything titillating from this alleged sex comedy, penned by actress/writer/Mrs. Seth Rogen Lauren Miller. For a Good Time, Call... focuses on a couple of unlikely roommates, played by Miller and Ari Graynor. They're a hapless pair, seen with a seriously unfunny callback to college escapades involving urine, and now they're managing to cover the rent on a swanky Manhattan apartment by running a phone-sex line. Obviously in this picture, the Internet hasn't been invented yet. Miller is the uptight goody-goody, an anonymous screen presence at best, while Graynor—who has a certain Bette Midler–ish comic quality—prances around in tight leopard-print clothes "exercising" on a stripper pole. Guess which one turns out to be a virgin in this movie's weirdly prehistoric parlance? Directed by Jamie Travis, For a Good Time, Call... is all loud colors and exaggerated reaction shots. It's so busy being shocked and snickering about the audacity of its subject matter that the audience need not bother. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Hope Springs ★★ ½ Tommy Lee Jones' rumpled poker face gets one hell of a workout in this almost-decent tale of marriage counseling by The Devil Wears Prada director David Frankel. Meryl Streep stars as a sexually frustrated housewife who signs herself and her hubby (Jones) up for intensive couples therapy in a Maine resort town. Steve Carell plays the shrink dead straight, smartly allowing questions about companionship and sex to ricochet off Streep's and Jones' sublime reaction shots. More melancholy than expected, Hope Springs wonders what happens when the thrill is gone. The movie takes the unfulfilled libidos of its AARP couple seriously, and it's unusual to see such frankness regarding characters of a certain age. (Meryl Streep gives oral? In a movie theater?) Unfortunately, Frankel is still a terrible filmmaker, and he slathers the soundtrack with a catalog of overplayed pop standards and resorts to a hokey montage every 10 minutes or so. Streep is predictably marvelous, but Jones' gruff, deadpan bleats steal the picture. (In the suburbs.)

Lawless ★★ In case you'd finally sorted out all of Bane's muffled, fey-Connery proclamations in The Dark Knight Rises, director John Hillcoat's Lawless provides another challenge in Tom Hardy dialogue recognition. Lawless is based on Matt Bondurant's 2008 book, The Wettest County in the World, an account of his family's bloody romp through the moonshine business in the 1930s. Scripted by murder balladeer Nick Cave—who previously collaborated with Hillcoat on The Proposition in 2005—Lawless seems torn between being a fanciful gangster melodrama and a harsher, more punitive film. Nobody wins. Hardy stars as the almost mythological Forrest, a quiet inspiration of terror among neighborhood locals, all of whom buy into the legend that he's some kind of immortal. (He's Tom Hardy, after all.) Playing the runt of the Bondurant litter, Shia LaBeouf is such a contemporary screen presence that you keep expecting him to whip out an iPhone and start texting from behind the wheel of his jalopy. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Looper ★★★ Writer/director Rian Johnson's nifty, time-bending thriller stars Bruce Willis as the future Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The latter plays a hit man for the mob, knocking off targets beamed back to 2044 from 30 years hence. Except for one fateful day when he's supposed to shoot…himself? Johnson's intriguingly lo-fi vision of the future is full of vintage blunderbusses, designer drugs and a tricky maze of paradoxical timelines. Jeff Daniels drops by for a hilarious supporting turn as a bored gangster from the future, but the main event is Gordon-Levitt's uncanny Willis impersonation. He's got the squint and the sneer down pat, making his distracting prosthetic nose somewhat unnecessary. Johnson, who helmed the terrific art-house oddity Brick and the significantly less charming Brothers Bloom, tries to keep the sci-fi elements grounded with rural farmhouses and workaday diners. He bites off a bit more than he can chew, but kudos to Willis for tweaking his own iconography and heading into waters much darker than initially expected. A clever, crafty little picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

ParaNorman ★★★ ½ ParaNorman doesn't strive to replicate Steven Spielberg's 1980s Amblin Entertainment pictures. It just naturally belongs in that group. From Laika studios (who brought us Coraline a few years back), this is a rousing adventure full of big scares, goofy humor and a pointed message. It's like what The Goonies might've been, if The Goonies had been beautifully animated and not terrible. Kodi Smit-McPhee voices the title character, Norman Babcock, a lonely adolescent outsider with a Chia-pet hairdo who sees dead people. It's unfair to reveal more, as the surprise and delight of Chris Butler's screenplay lies in its sharp turns. That's the unexpectedly thoughtful thing about ParaNorman. The movie keeps upending your expectations, urging you to look beyond the surface. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Premium Rush ★★ ½ With a title more befitting of an energy drink, writer/director David Koepp's stripped-down, ticking-clock thriller is one of those time-wasters that's just good enough for passing a late-summer evening. Joseph Gordon-Levitt cements his nascent star status as Wilee "the Coyote"—a bike messenger zipping through rush hour traffic at unfathomable speeds. But on one particularly crappy Friday, Wilee finds himself delivering an envelope that's wanted by a belligerent cop with dental problems. Michael Shannon, our broken cuckoo clock of a character actor, plays this endlessly confounded doofus. Obviously, Wilee is really the Road Runner, as he frantically pedals his way out of one death trap after another, with only occasional pauses for pesky stuff like exposition. Premium Rush is non-stop action with a brightly colored, throwback gloss, reminiscent of the low-stakes VHS tapes of a forgotten era. (At Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At Brattle, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Sleepwalk With Me ★★ Otherwise known as NPR Goes to the Movies, Sleepwalk With Me was produced by hipster godhead Ira Glass and takes a great 10 minutes or so of radio and stretches it out to an 80-minute running time, with no idea what to do with the visuals. You've probably heard the plot by now. I believe it started on The Moth spoken-word circuit, before Glass picked it up for his radio show. Short version: Mike Birbiglia is an aspiring stand-up comic not in love with his fiancée, and his anxiety manifests itself in a weird sleepwalking disorder. Weeks on the road precipitate a somnambulistic breakdown, and he has to make a few life choices. The end. This is a great radio bit, and Birbiglia has a conversational tone that's awfully ingratiating. Problem is that somebody decided to make his story a movie. Birbiglia spends the early reels talking directly into the camera, and the DIY aesthetic reeks of amateur hour. Nobody bothered to outsize this interior monologue into an actual motion picture. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting

Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Trouble With the Curve ★★ ½ Clint Eastwood is never less than delightful in Trouble With the Curve, an otherwise lousy movie helmed by his longtime assistant director Robert Lorenz. The octogenarian icon stars as a crotchety baseball scout trying to cling to his job with the Atlanta Braves, despite the fact that he's obviously going blind. There's nobody better at being a curmudgeon, and Eastwood growls and cusses before displaying stray moments of unexpected delicacy. His semi-estranged daughter, Mickey (named for Mantle, naturally), steps in to do what she can. Played by Amy Adams, she's never quite credible as a baseball-obsessed tomboy. A believability-stretching road trip to North Carolina ensues, but there's really not all that much going on in Randy Brown's determinedly low-stakes screenplay. At least not much besides the pleasure of watching the lead performances. Trouble With the Curve doesn't just remind you what a wonderful screen presence Eastwood is; it makes you appreciate him even more as a director because Lorenz does such a crummy job. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Words ★ Hilariously pretentious with almost nothing to say, this ponderous would-be epic from directors Brian Klugman and Lee Sternthal crafts three stories in a nesting-doll structure, each plot more ludicrous than the last. Bradley Cooper stars as a failed novelist who discovers a brilliant manuscript in a Hemingway-era satchel. Passing the book off as his own, he incurs the wrath of the original author, played by Jeremy Irons, who shows up here in some terrible old-age makeup and tries to singlehandedly make the picture amusing by sheer force of his scenery-chewing. The wannabe Philip Glass score and ostentatious camera movements suggest a bigger production, so the filmmakers add a badly miscast Dennis Quaid as a rough-and-tumble novelist spouting the picture's thesis statements. It's a movie about literature made by people who don't seem to like books very much. The Words grapples with antiquated notions of writers as Mailer-esque he-men, swaggering and screwing their way through a luxurious literary scene that doesn't actually exist anymore. This is a deeply stupid, silly picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Like a Version

The Soul of Brit

Move over Adele—there's a new British sensation on the rise. Emeli Sandé's debut album, Our Version of Events, surpassed Adele's 21 as the UK's best-selling album of 2012. She's currently touring with Coldplay and performed during both the opening and closing ceremonies of the Olympics. Not to mention, she completed three years of med school. If that's not enough, the Nina Simone–inspired singer was crowned as this year's Brits Critics' Choice Award winner, joining the likes of Jessie J and Florence + the Machine, and she's earned praise from Alicia Keys and the hard-to-please Simon Cowell. On Oct. 10, you can be the judge of her talent when she sings at the Paradise Rock Club. Sarah Hagman

Dominic Casserly

Elephant in the Room

Recycled Goods It's your childhood imagination materialized. The five Boston boys of the Individuals Collective sculpt, mold and build life-size characters worthy of the most inventive fairy tales and the darkest nightmares. Salvaging scraps to shape into thought-provoking installations, Luke O'Sullivan, Colin Driesch, Dominic Casserly, Andrew Meers and Winston MacDonald have been expressing their collective inner child since 2003. Their work has been featured across the East Coast, four times at the renowned music festival Bonnaroo, and in multiple Boston storefronts and alleyways. Experience their latest installation in the group show Elsewhere at the Distillery Gallery through Oct. 26.

Broken Record

The smell of old vinyl records and sounds of bickering storeowners inspired Telegraph Avenue, Michael Chabon's latest novel about the grooves of modern society. Chabon explores a territory close to his own Northern Californian upbringing—the conflicts between the towns of Oakland and Berkeley. In this '60s-inspired project, which he initially pitched as a TV series more than a decade ago, he examines the relationship between two families and their mutual struggle to stay afloat when corporations threaten their jobs. What's Next—Jell-O Shots in the Principal's Office?

When I was a kid, back to school meant a new bookbag, assorted school supplies (anyone remember reinforcements?) and nine months of execrable cafeteria food.

Though judging by the Back to School gala to benefit the Bridge Boston Charter School, it now means an open bar with an ice luge, a slamming DJ, superb sushi, finger-lickin' fish tacos and other delicacies made by celebrity chefs like Evan Deluty, Ken Oringer, Michael Schlow and the geniuses over at Douzo.

I may have thought my school was a fashion show/popularity contest, but it was nothing compared to the painfully chic and stunningly attractive crowd who partied the night away inside the school's new Dorchester digs.

Among them: Bond girl Olga Gomanova, Page Six fixture James Cannon Boyce with high-powered PBS babe Christina Ballantoni, beauty queens Pamela Vargas and Ashley Karger, their investment whiz other halves, Paul and Wes, man of leisure Mark Andrus and his stunt double, Matt Greer, personal trainer to the stars Donny Fausey, international man of mystery Christian Bailey, the drop-dead Melinda Sarkis, celebrated designer Marty Dykas with the devastatingly handsome Karim Fadel, blonde bombshell Courtney Wilkinson, ubiquitous hipsters Ben and Tonya Mezrich, globe-trotters Mitch and Chrissy Sayare, executive director Jug Chokshi, principal Jennifer Daly, and one guest who earned detention when he pissed off a bartender by availing himself of a bottle of booze.

Apropos of a conversation about breakfast, one woman said, "I love Danish," to which her friend responded, "I dated a guy from Denmark once, and he was delicious."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from the socialite who emerged from the dance floor cupping her boobs and complaining, "My chick filets are melting."

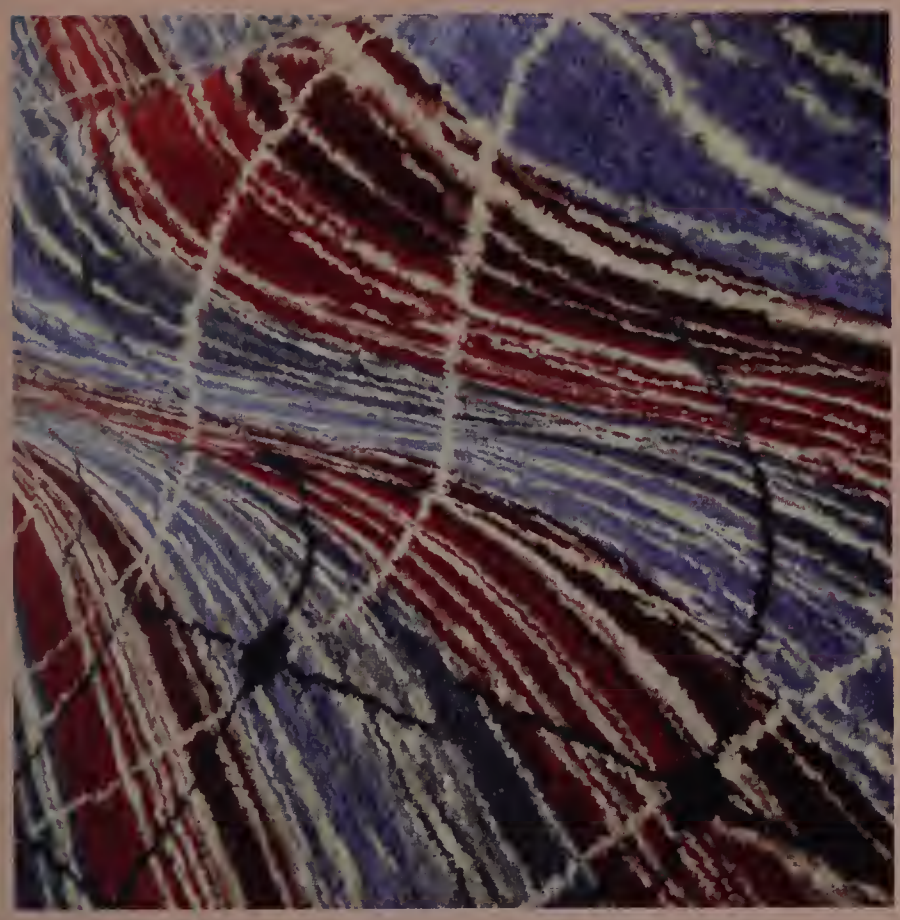
The Feast of St. Julia

The pope might need to weigh in on this, but Julia Child has clearly (and unsurprisingly) been beatified as the patron saint of WGBH, which hosted its Taste of WGBH: Food and Wine Festival inside their swanky studios.

The city's best chefs were paired with wineries from around the world, and spotted grazing among the mind-boggling buffet were the likes of classical radio queen Laura DiCarlo, babe-a-licious Brazilian Luciana Schachnik and her handsome husband, Gilson, Chestnut Hellions Debbie Lewis and Bob Grinberg, connoisseurs of life Mark and Joyce Goldweitz, broadcasting power-babe Julie Kahn and her other half, Dan Scully, Cambridge doyenne Susan Paine, the governor's dapper nephew Brandon Sigh, and one man who said, "Our 14-year-old daughter told our Brazilian nanny that I'm in touch with my feminine side."



"I'd much rather watch her drop a chicken on the floor than see Martha Stewart's smug face as she pulls something perfect out of the oven."

Meanwhile, another guest offered yet another chapter heading for The Joy of Parenthood, saying, "We have a six-month-old. Sleep is the new sex."

However, the evening's highlight came when WGBH personality Jared Bowen introduced a video montage of Julia Child (whose favorite red pepper soup was being served by UpStairs on the Square), which prompted someone to say, "I'd much rather watch her drop a chicken on the floor than see Martha Stewart's smug face as she pulls something perfect out of the oven." ✖✖✖

THE COMPLEX TALE OF THE UMBRELLA

Also known as The Bumbershoot
AKA The Gamp / AKA The Brolly

Once made using whalebone.

PORTUGUESE SAILORS ⚓ CONSIDERED IT A SYMBOL OF AUTHORITY.

WITH NAMES LIKE the Bumbershoot, the Gamp and the Brolly,
IT'S NO WONDER MEN IN ANCIENT GREECE DIDN'T CONSIDER THE UMBRELLA "MANLY" ENOUGH TO CARRY. BUT ALL THAT CHANGED WHEN DRIZZLE-BLOCKING VISIONARY JONAS HANWAY INTRODUCED THE UMBRELLA TO ENGLAND IN THE 18th CENTURY.

By the next century, some British and U.S. soldiers were even carrying umbrellas into battle. Most of them died. But to their credit, they died dry.
Today, the world is filled with Brolliologists: men and women who devote their lives to the study of the umbrella. BECAUSE IT'S NOT JUST A MESS OF METAL AND FABRIC THAT KEEPS RAIN FROM MIXING WITH YOUR HAIR GEL.
THE UMBRELLA HAS A RICH HISTORY, AND IT'S SURPRISINGLY COMPLEX.

Northern Exposure

I once made a pilgrimage to L'Anse aux Meadows, an outcrop of northern Newfoundland where the Vikings landed in the 11th century. It's a place of shale and moss, of sapphire horizons limned with the glow of icebergs. Standing there on the rocky shore in the raw, salt wind, it's easy to feel you've reached the end of the world.

Adam DeTour

The Vikings had about as much success as a chimp with a typewriter trying to bang out an ironic tragedy in five acts, but they left behind a neat set of unassuming, grassy mounds. There was a lot of sod and some bits of iron slag, and the voiceover for the tour spoke earnestly about the role of butternuts in the colonists' diet. We had, of course, driven more than 1,500 miles to see this.

Afterwards, we stopped at a low-slung roadhouse, the sort that wears the lone word "Restaurant" on a Coca-Cola sign above the door. The tablecloths and flowers were vinyl, and the carpet was a shade of red that hadn't seen widespread acceptance since 1977. Our waitress—predictably older, tobacco-steeped, laconic—offered us two choices. "Salmon or cod?"

Having read something about the Grand Banks, I asked for the cod. One of my friends gambled on the salmon. When it arrived, I gave it a hoggy snort of interest.

"Next time I'm here, I'm going to order that," I said.

Which goes to show that you can travel thousands of miles, but you can't escape yourself. Nor yourself's stupid-ass comments.

In this issue, our writers escape the city, the banal, the election season and the distractions of untrained consciousness, while Ezra is shamed by a massage.

GRAIN COURSE

A NICE SALTERNATIVE

WHEN SCOTT ROUSSEAU AND his wife, Sarah, bought a gourmet sea salt company, Beyond the Shaker, this past April, they tossed an entire shaker of salt behind their backs for good luck. Table salt, not sea. "We'd never waste all-natural sea salt," says Rousseau. "It's too good!" The Woburn couple creates organic blends by combining local spices from North Truro with salts from Australia, France, Italy, Bolivia, Greece and the Himalayas. Flavors like the carbon-rich Hawaiian black lava complement eggs Benedict or mashed potatoes, while the Windy City celery mix, inspired by the condiments on a Chicago-style hot dog, embellishes the rim of a Bloody Mary. "We might even try to harvest our own salt for personal use by evaporating ocean water from Maine or Massachusetts." Superstitions aside, this company is clearly worth its salt. HANNAH SHEINBERG

Good Eats

Soft Pretzels

No wonder German lagers and soft pretzels go so well together—they have a lot in common: a rich golden surface that gives way to ripe yeast and sweet malt flavors. This month, we'll be enjoying our fair share of both from a couple of our go-to beer bars (and one of our favorite bakeries), alternating between thimbles of spiked cheese dip and mustards for dunking. Guten appetit. ELIZABETH BOMZE

The Lower Depths

The outside of this piping hot coil of dough wafts butter while the inside is as fluffy as a dinner roll. That combination makes it more akin to the Pennsylvania-Dutch variety (think Auntie Anne's, but better). It's a perfect match for bold-faced condiments—grainy mustard made brash (but balanced) with ale, and a creamy, slightly spicy queso-lager dip.

Christy Timon and Abe Faber usually bake these dark-crusted, beautifully asymmetrical Bavarian twists on weekend mornings, but this month they've decided to be Oktober-festive and ramp up production. Stop in for one any day between Oct. 22-28, and while you're at it, treat yourself to a piece of apple strudel, too.

The classic take: an open knot, a wrinkly crust, plenty of pull and chew, and heavy on the yeast. A single pretzel comes with tangy whole-grain mustard, while upgrading to a double order comes with a small vat of tawny beer cheese—a 50-50, fondue-like hybrid of Irish stout and American cheese.

Beauty

Blood Simple

More rejuvenating than a full day's sleep in a coffin, the vampire-esque facelift at Nichole Brennan's Skin Deep Medical Spa transforms sags and bags into bouncy, youthful skin. It's also not nearly as scary as it sounds.

News on Vine and wine

BEST KNOWN FOR ITS storied history and high-pressure high school, Lexington may finally be ready to shed its rep as a restaurant-poor suburb when the Vine Brook Tavern opens its doors in early November.

"We're all about hospitality," says managing partner Marcus Palmer, who describes the concept as "a baby Gramercy Tavern." Formerly the GM at Market in the W Hotel, Palmer has brought along chef Chris Frothingham, who's worked for Frank McLelland and Todd English. The affordable menu will feature the usual suspects: "duck, short ribs, salmon, black bass, nothing too intricate," says Palmer. Twenty-four wines will be available by the glass, as well as 25 artisanal beers.

As for the setting, there's four dining rooms upstairs and a bar and lounge downstairs, all in a building which has served as a post office, tavern and even a Vinny Testa's. Talk about history.

BACK IN BOSTON, THE RECENTLY appointed head sommelier at Bistro du Midi is sorting through the inventory still left over from Excelsior, the space's previous inhabitant. That means figuring out what to do with the stash of crème de cacao and five bottles of Midori. "Who orders melon balls anymore?" Kate Moore asks. No matter, Moore, formerly of L'Espalier, is focusing mostly on organic and biodynamic wines, sourcing locally (within a 100-mile radius, e.g., the Hudson Valley and Long Island) and helping to "create a new culture" of resourcefulness. "Otherwise, we're spending all our money on gas and oil" to transport the product, Moore explains. Her prediction on where wine is headed? "The future is box wine." We'll raise a carton to that.

A CELEBRATION OF BELGIAN BEER

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

First Taste

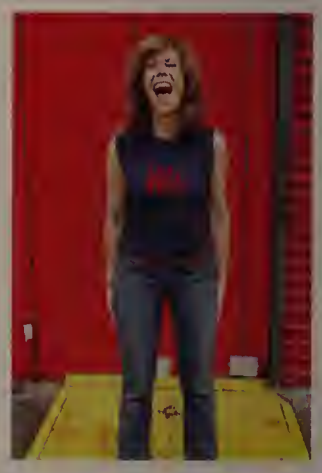
BREAKING GROUND

A chef/owner's debut restaurant is necessarily personal. Will Gilson's Puritan & Co. feels especially like the culmination of one man's journey—he cashed in every favor and used every resource to create a dining experience he hopes will keep patrons gravitating to Inman Square. "Doing everything right takes time," says Gilson, whose restaurant is nearing its 11th month of construction, planning and anticipation. It's finally set to open (fingers crossed) on Nov. 1, but not under its original concept, or even its original name.

"We finally got to the point of realizing what this building was and how the name evolved with that," says Gilson of the old Bosphorus space, which in the early 1900s housed the Puritan Cake Company. Now guests will be greeted by a 1920s Glenwood stove that serves as the host stand, an element of the "urban farmhouse" atmosphere reflective of Gilson's upbringing on his family farm in Groton. But the stove isn't just some flea-market find—it's the first he ever cooked with in his folks' restaurant, the Herb Lyceum. "There are plenty of ways you can antique things to make them look old," says Gilson. "It's another thing when each piece has a story attached to it."

The story doesn't end with the décor. What started in Gilson's head as a fast-paced, tapas-style eatery has since transformed into something much more leisurely. He anticipates hour-long pre-meals lubricated with a good selection of fine wines. Without a full liquor license, Gilson's ramping up the wine program, and every server is going through extensive training on tasting notes. "We're turning this into a destination rather than just a restaurant," he says.

The menu features New England pastoral dishes with the occasional ethnic twist. Meats take center stage, like Gilson's lamb chop wrapped in sausage and served with greens and hay-roasted carrots. Several items that may find their way to the communal table are prepared sous vide. Also look for house-made vermouth, produce from the Gilsons' farm and ingredients pickled and canned on the property.



Just don't bring up farm-to-table, a term which sours Gilson's expression. "We have a farm. We have tables," he says. "You can make up the rest from there."

Daily Show co-creator Lizz Winstead reads from her new book, _Lizz Free or Die_, at the Boston Book Festival Oct. 27 and performs comedy at Johnny D's on Oct. 28.

Did you have a favorite during the GOP race?

This is the first time that I've felt as a satirist that it didn't mater who the nominee was, because it was going to be rich in delight. So I didn't have a favorite. I'm from Minnesota, so I have a fondness for Michelle Bachman only because I've followed her career for so long. I don't know if you saw this, today was her call for banning falafel in public schools, because it's obviously engaging in the creeping sharia that is happening in our society. If you eat hummus, you hate freedom.

How is comedy a useful lens when looking at politics?

Comedy is a common denominator. If you make somebody laugh, you have a connection with them whether they like it or not. And then it opens up into people listening more. It's a good way to point out hypocrisy without being bombastic and screamy. It's a good way to get people engaged. And I also think that there's a catharsis when things seem so nutty. I've never seen a political field so comedy-friendly. I've also never lived in a time that's been so economically scary. When you gather people together in a room to laugh about the scary times we're living in, people do feel like they're not alone, and that's really helpful because if people laugh they haven't given up hope.

What do you think of people getting their news from Comedy Central?

We know that there's something wrong with the media. They were the watchdogs for corporate malfeasance. Now we have comedians be the watchdogs of the watchdogs. It seems that the message they've got from the success of the _Daily Show_ and _Colbert_ isn't, "Wow, maybe we should be more investigative and dig deeper." The message they got was, "Oh, people wanted the news to be funnier." They don't understand that the funny part of those shows is the mocking of how they present and what they don't do to create a more informed electorate. I would say, thank God that comedians have taken the mantle. Somebody needs to correct the record. HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

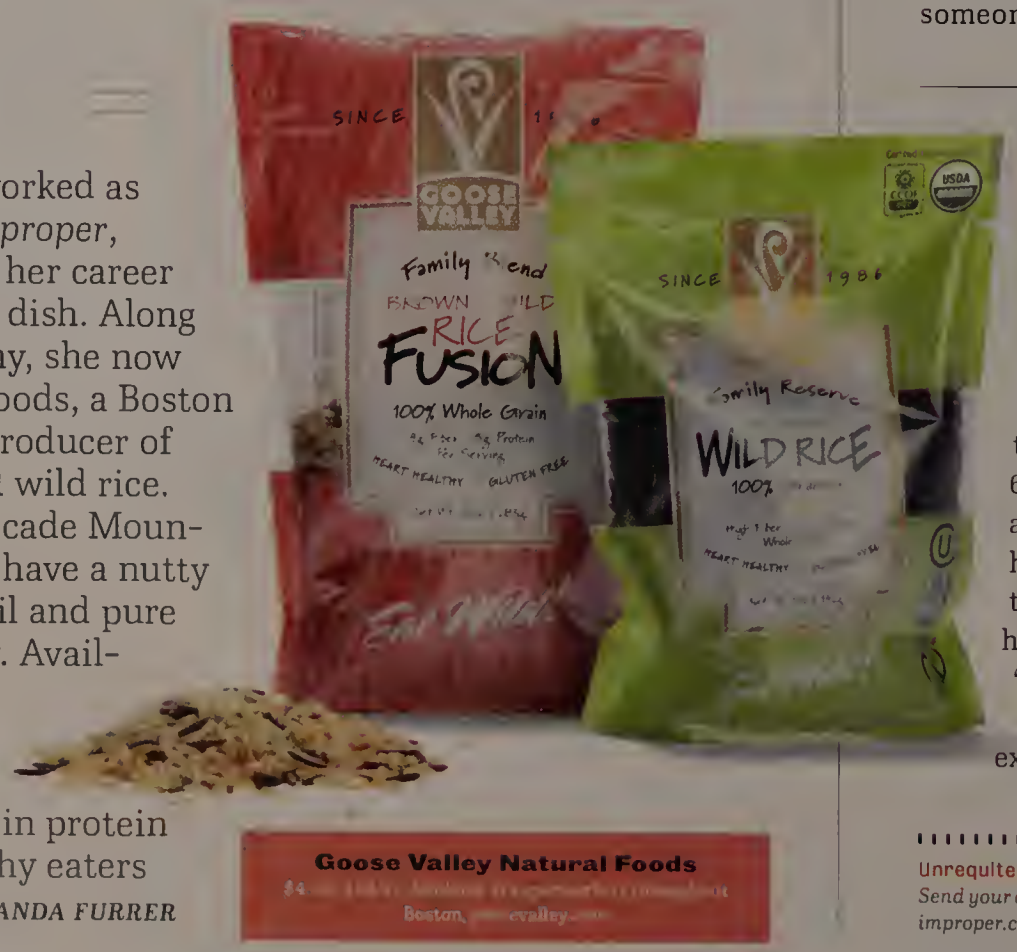
PATCH WORK

There are more than 70 varieties of gourds and squash, so navigating the pumpkin patch is a little complicated. On Oct. 26, Boston restaurants celebrate National Pumpkin Day with fall-inspired delicacies, but here's a gourd-geous guide to getting the most from them at home.

1 Fragrant, round and bright orange, the CINDERELLA PUMPKIN is a French variety. Also known as Rouge Vif D'Etampes, it was renamed for its resemblance to the iconic pumpkin carriage. Though great for carving and roasted seeds, its stringy consistency makes for a bad pie.

2 The BLUE HUBBARD SQUASH may have an icy exterior, but its custard-like flesh is a vibrant shade of marigold. A mellow sweetness makes it ideal for a roasted side dish or creamy soup served with chunks of crusty bread.

3 Cousin to butternut squash, the LONG ISLAND CHEESE PUMPKIN is the orange mash in a can of pie filling. This New England variety was nearly extinct in the late 1900s before farmers in Long Island recultivated it, mostly for use in pies.



4 The SUGAR PUMPKIN is as sweet as it sounds and can be roasted, sautéed, steamed or pureed. Its creamy texture pairs with savory flavors like herbs, curries and mushrooms or sweet ones like brown sugar, molasses and honey.

5 At first glance, an AMBERCUP SQUASH looks a lot like a small pumpkin with burnt orange skin. The smooth flesh on the inside, however, makes it better for cooking than carving. Ambercup's pulp can be scooped out, transforming the vegetable into an edible serving dish for salty fillings that complement its sweetness. TAMARA OMAZIC

Wild Things

When Barbara Mattaliano worked as an assistant editor at the Improper, she probably didn't imagine her career would take flight over a side dish. Along with cofounder George Denny, she now runs Goose Valley Natural Foods, a Boston company that's the largest producer of certified organic and natural wild rice. Grown on a ranch in the Cascade Mountains, the gluten-free grains have a nutty flavor due to the volcanic soil and pure water from the melted snow. Available straight up or in blends with arborio, basmati, brown rice and beans, it's lower in calories and higher in protein than the regular stuff. Healthy eaters will no doubt flock to it. AMANDA FURRER

HATS OFF

TO THE MAN'S MAN OF SALESMEN AT GOORIN BROS.: I ducked into your shop on Newbury Street during a chill, misty day last week to be greeted by your prompt though soft welcome. And then our dance began. Your Breaking Bad–blue meth eyes and bearded face made me forget I don't actually like cloches, that I'm not actually that interested in textile history. But I was interested in you and your GQ-worthy style, with that vest fitting so sleekly across your chest and those pants just tight and short enough. You wore that fedora with authority and stood just close enough to warm my skin without being a creep. But you made a creep out of me.

Crazy for one Goorin Bro.

To the idiot in the purple 1990s jumpsuit who decided to yell out to me, "Damn girl, you got some ass on you, no disrespect": Are you kidding me? I did yell back at you and tell you that it was highly disrespectful, but I need to make my point a little clearer. I am almost 100 percent sure that you don't read this magazine or anything of any substance given the fact that you thought I'd be appreciative of such a comment. To all men out there: I may have an ass and all that, but I am someone's wife. Learn some respect.

Serious about chivalry

To the producers of* Here Comes Honey Boo Boo: While I enjoy a good reality show where people openly embarrass themselves, I have to say it has gone too far. Honey Boo Boo is not only offensive, the plot is mediocre, if not nonexistent. There's just something wrong about watching a 6-year-old, who can barely speak any semblance of a language, drink her weight in Red Bull and Mountain Dew while spray tanning herself with what she refers to as "poop." Please do everyone a favor and spare us from this obvious exploitation. TV watchers everywhere

Drink of the Moment

BRANCHING OUT

NAME: Autumn Apple Fizz

PRICE: $14.50

INVENTOR: Beverage director Todd Lipman.

INGREDIENTS: Eden Ice Cider Company's Orleans Aperitif, Old Overholt Rye Whiskey, lemon juice, egg white and Fee Brothers Whiskey Barrel-Aged Bitters.

TASTE: Lighter than expected, considering the flick of rye on the nose. The mellow apple flavor is dominant, enlivened with notes of clove, cinnamon and allspice, while the egg white gives the drink a velvet body. The rye is almost buried, imparting the faintest edge. "I wanted the predominant flavor to be the apple," says Lipman. "And these sort of bitters are very autumnal."

CIDER RULES: A dry "artisanal wine" from Vermont made with heirloom apples, it's got 15.5 percent alcohol and is infused with basil and anise hyssop. "It's a small-production item," says Lipman. "Helping develop these smaller companies is important to me."

PAIR IT WITH: Sweet onion crusted roast veal tenderloin, located in the menu under the rubric of "Spicy/ Earthy Reds."

AN ALTERNATE AUTUMN TIPPLE: The Apricot Side Car. Even though apricots are technically a summer fruit, this drink's cognac base lends it gravitas, with sour notes from fresh lime juice.

BAR PHILOSOPHY: Lipman, who won our Boston's Best sommelier award in 2011, thinks the old style of "specialty" cocktail lists is disappearing. "People are adventurous," he says. "I hate to use the term trendy, but people are ready to embrace the style of cocktail program in Eastern Standard, Hawthorne, Drink and other places." Meaning seasonal, high quality drinks. "Embracing the past while considering the present."

A guide to Somerville's international dining scene

SAVE ON AIRFARE. SOMERville is booming with international flavors, bringing you the tastes of India, Mexico, Japan, Puerto Rico and beyond. This colorful book scrunches together shops, chefs and recipes, and includes crucial exotic ingredients that hit the culinary bull's-eye. It tells you where to find tongue-ticklers like Nepalese timur, Szechuan peppers or Salvadoran flor de loroco.

Reading about the immigrant workers who washed and waitered and cooked their way to ownership—often surrounded by close family and employees from their homelands—brings a human face to the story, even when we're reading about intimidating amounts of food (La

Nibble
produced by the Somerville Arts Council

This guidebook covers local food.

Internacional Foods sells 1,000 10-pound bags weekly; WellFoods sells three whole goats a day). And Francisco de la Barra's portraits of chefs are created using actual spices in his paint; talk about "You are what you eat."

These stories make you want to cook the subjects' food and meet them at their restaurants. Life-before-Somerville stories include a man describing making yucca flour in messy, boiling hot circumstances in Brazil. The American epitome of lovable goo, Marshmallow Fluff, was perfected in Somerville, leading to the What the Fluff? Festival. And next, putting on French airs, comes a brûlée version! ×××

QUOTE PAGE 44: They are hands-on, and their personalities imbue their businesses with warm Latino flavor. Step into La Cantina and Roberto Rendon might greet you with a boisterous "Hola, gringa!" followed by "Have you tried my jalapeño margaritas?" A few doors down at Casa B, Jockovich will chat with you unhurriedly at the door, while downstairs, head chef Cabré is likely dazzling patrons at the kitchen bar by constructing one of his artful desserts. At El Potro on weekend evenings, Elias Interiano might just saunter up to your table and serenade you with his mariachi band.

TRAD ABOUT YOU

The historic charm of Lake Winnipesaukee's Wolfeboro Inn

INN STYLE A classic feel is balanced with modern amenities and a lavish bar.

OVERLOOKING Lake Winnipesaukee, the largest lake in New Hampshire, the town of Wolfeboro claims to be "America's Oldest Summer Resort." One of its oldest lodgings is the Wolfeboro Inn, which, while it draws big crowds during the warmer months, turns out to be best visited during the fall. Not only can you savor the gorgeous foliage, but also the quieter, more serene side of the lodge and town.

Flaming red, orange and yellow maples provide a mesmerizing view for your drive up to the town named after General James Wolfe, commander of the British expedition that defeated the French in the Battle of the Plains of Abraham in 1759, leading to the British rule of Canada. Shortly after arriving in the heart of downtown Wolfeboro, you'll see the welcoming glow from the inn, a white clapboard structure originally built in 1812 for the Rogers family. Subsequent owners and renovations have brought it to its current state, a modern country-style resort with traditional New England décor, including a stuffed moose head in the tavern.

✓ Traveler's Checks

The Wolfeboro Inn operates a 65-foot replica of a turn-of-the-century paddle-wheel boat called the Winnipesaukee Belle.

Light sleepers should request a room on the inn's highest level to avoid the potential squeak of historic floorboards.

The Inn's ballrooms make it a popular wedding destination.

Room choices include modern suites with lake view balconies and amenities like wi-fi. Furnishings have a comfy, rustic feel with oversized armchairs, exposed wood beams, and drapes and bedding in earthy tones of chestnut, straw and sky blue. To play up the inn's woodsy feel, the lamps have antler bases, the nightstands boast a pinecone motif, and the brown plaid shower curtains are festooned with fir trees and moose. The downstairs lobby sports tree stump tables and a massive stone fireplace.

For dining, the casual Wolfe's Tavern has earned accolades for its Sunday brunch. In addition to an omelet station, you'll find a bounty of carved meats, specialty entrées, soups, salads and desserts like the warm, bittersweet-chocolate croissant bread pudding with fresh raspberry sauce and whipped cream. The tavern has the added distinction of being one of the Lakes Region's only authentic New England-style pubs—it's been serving local fare since the early 1800s, and the kitchen still prides itself on meats, seafood, produce and cheeses sourced from the surrounding area, showcased in creations like the New Hampshire wild mushroom and eggplant tart made with local fungi and goat cheese. Families will find plenty of options, including the inevitable pizzas.

The bar, on the other hand, draws an eclectic mix of young couples and locals. Frequent visitors can become a member of the Mug Club. By generously donating your time to tasting all 100 beers that the tavern serves, you receive an inscribed Wolfe's Tavern pewter mug to hang from the ceiling. (There are 2,200+ proud members.) Alternately (or in addition to), you can be indoctrinated into the Martini Club after consuming 50 martinis and kissing the aforementioned moose head, netting you a customized stainless steel martini glass. Both clubs offer a dollar discount off every beer or martini ordered thereafter for life.

One of the pleasures of staying at the Wolfeboro Inn is its location. Only steps away from downtown, it's an easy stroll to visit the shops and eateries, such as the diminutive Lydia's Café for tasty coffee drinks and homemade muffins. Don't miss Hampshire Pewter, which carries a huge selection of tree ornaments as well as items for the home. If vintage is more your style, try Dragonflies Antiques & Decorating Center, set in a magnificent yellow barn with thousands of items, ranging from old typewriters to Fiesta tableware.

In warmer weather, Lake Winnipesaukee provides all sorts of boating options, including canoeing and kayaking off the inn's private beach. The area also has plenty of hiking and walking paths like the Cotton Valley Rail-Trail, a scenic six-mile railroad corridor that winds through woods and fields and past three lakes. For kids, DeVyders Farm offers hay rides, apple-picking and cider-making, while Moulton Farm in nearby Meredith, N.H., has corn mazes, a petting zoo, fresh produce, baked goods (including cider donuts) and a pick-your-own pumpkin patch to find that perfect orange orb for Halloween. ×××

THE GOOD OLD DAYS

WELL-COMPOSED Tournedos Rossini bring classic flavors to this remodeled venue.

I LOVE HISTORY, AND I LOVE food, so what could be better than a restaurant that combines the two? At Kitchen, chef de cuisine Scott Herritt, of Grotto and the Marliave, takes the traditions of gastronomy seriously, and he constructs his menu with recipes from a collection of historic cookbooks. As a former teacher and perpetual student, I was intrigued by his efforts and extremely pleased with the results sent forth from his latest project.

Housed in the compact Tremont Street space that was formerly Pops, Kitchen's dining room seats about 40 amidst exposed brick and black leather banquettes. An open kitchen provides a show for a 10-stool bar, and a room in the back sequesters private parties of up to 20 history buffs.

An opener of steak tartare ($14) was a super-sized cylinder of luscious, tender chopped filet, with the deft deployment of mustard and capers enhancing the first-rate beef flavor. Slices of hard-boiled egg, used in place of raw, made the perfect garnish. Billi Bi ($14), a luxurious mussel soup created in the early 1900s at Maxim's in Paris, combined shellfish with shallots, parsley, butter, cream, white wine and saffron: simply outstanding. From the same period, "under glass" ($15) brought braised oxtail, sautéed wild mushrooms and house-made cheddar. The removal of the miniature bell jar covering the dish unleashed rich, robust aromas, a little Victorian theater to accompany your dinner. I thought the cheese a mistake, though, as the meat and mushrooms could've held the stage alone. Finally among starters, an amphibious flip on Buffalo wings produced battered and fried frogs' legs ($12), their mild flavor punched up by a peppery sauce, with blue cheese and a pleasant garnish of pickled julienne carrot and daikon cooling the spice.

Of the main courses, tournedos Rossini ($34) stood out from the field. Reportedly created in the 1830s by chef Marie-Antoine Carême for Gioachino Rossini, composer of The Barber of Seville and William Tell Overture, this opulent dish included a succulent filet of beef topped by sautéed foie gras and black truffle, all bathed in a Madeira sauce. A stainless-steel ramekin of spinach laced with cheese pushed the plate to a crescendo of delicious excess. Sole meunière ($24), a generous fillet lightly floured and sautéed in butter, vied for second honors. In 1948, it was Julia Child's encounter with this preparation in Paris that motivated her to become the cook who revolutionized the American kitchen. With a lovely side of summer squash and buttery potatoes flecked with parsley, Kitchen's rendition reminds you of the simple pleasures of this dish.

CRUNCH TIME Apple crisp with ice cream

Lobster thermidor ($32) arrived in a portion more than ample to share. Perfectly cooked hunks of lobster meat—tail, claws and knuckles—entwined with flour gnocchi dressed with spinach, cheese and Dijon mustard. There's a school of thought that seafood should never be combined with cheese. Kitchen's thermidor makes a dent in that prejudice. Another entree less exalted than these medal winners, though faced with tough competition, was pork and beans ($21). The old American West's answer to France's cassoulet, the hearty plate included a robust meatball of ground offal, well-spiced house-made sausage and hearty, al dente white beans. Though straightforward, the preparation showed real skill, and only the flawed addition of gristly spareribs kept this selection as a more of a rough-and-tumble outlier than a standout.

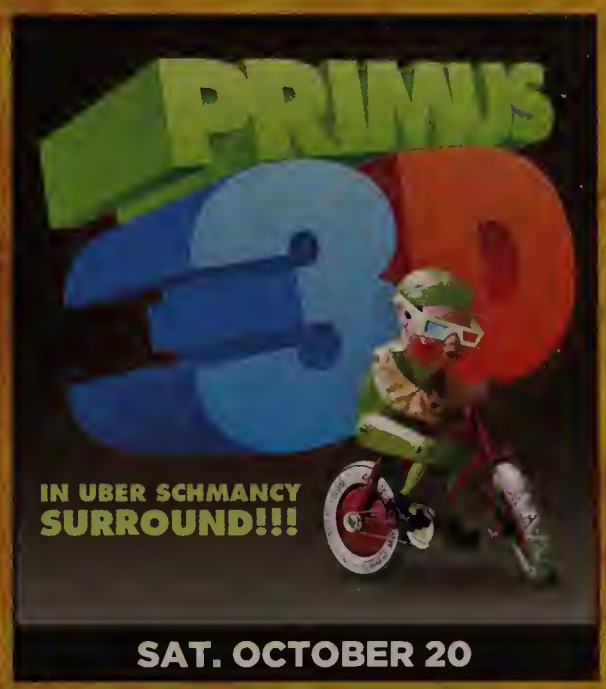
Putting a suitable punctuation mark at the end of a particularly sumptuous meal, the apple crisp ($9) combined sweet-tart apples and sweet, strudel-like crumbles. Served hot from the oven and topped with a scoop of house-churned ice cream, it's a wonderful autumnal note.



The wine list is currently being reworked, but on my visits options began at $35, with one bottle, Lioco Indica, rather flabby and unworthy of Kitchen's excellent food. Much better, at $45, was the Napa Cellars 2009 full-bodied cabernet sauvignon ($45). But at the price, I'd be tempted to stick with the excellent IPAs (Dogfishhead 60 Minute and Bear Republic Racer 5), a bargain at $6.

The restaurant's service is attentive and informed, the staff's demeanor friendly but not overly chummy. The waitress on my second visit, in fact, was one of the most polished and professional I've encountered in some time. Kitchen is a place to revisit, both to revel in the past and to see what will be uncovered in the future. ×××

Q: I HAVE A FEW BROWN AGE SPOTS AND MY COMPLEXION IS UNEVEN. WHAT CAN I DO?

A: As a result of sun exposure, most of us will develop brown age spots, freckles, and/or broken capillaries. This is easily corrected with IPL (Intense Pulsed Light) treatments. IPL is a safe, tried-and-true method of using light energy to break up the melanin that composes brown spots, and also eliminates unsightly broken capillaries.

The procedure is quick and there is no down time. We can treat the face, chest, and even hands. At SkinHealth Centers, our favorite technique is alternating microdermabrasion treatments with IPL treatments. Microdermabrasion provides an effective exfoliation which enhances the effect of the IPL treatments. We are happy to provide a free consultation and tell you more about this very affordable approach to a beautiful complexion.

HANDLEBAR HEROES

Ben Affleck's Argo doesn't leave an audience member behind.

Argo ★★★☆
Starring Ben Affleck, Alan Arkin, Bryan Cranston, John Goodman, Victor Garber and Kyle Chandler. Screenplay by Chris Terrio. Directed by Ben Affleck. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

PEOPLE OF BOSTON, I'M relieved to confirm that we don't have to be ashamed of Ben Affleck.

I know it got a bit rough about 10 years back, with that whole Bennifer thing in the tabloids. I say this as somebody who sat through Gigli and can attest that it wasn't even the worst of the three Ben Affleck movies released in 2003. Plus, it was annoying hearing him carry on about the Red Sox all the time.

But everybody loves a comeback kid, and ever since making his directorial debut with 2007's shockingly sturdy Gone Baby Gone, Affleck has career-rehabbed himself into a respectable filmmaker. (For argument's sake, we'll just admire how well-crafted The Town was and pretend for a minute that it wasn't also very silly.) Affleck graduates to another level with Argo, a clean crowd-pleaser aimed at adults. In a bygone era, there would probably be at least 10 or 12 pictures like this a year, but since they don't make them like they used to, let's celebrate this white-knuckle thriller, based on a story so insane it could only happen in Hollywood.

It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. With riots in the streets, it's only a matter of time before they're found out. Enter Affleck's Tony Mendez, a CIA pro who figures he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony science-fiction movie shoot.

> The climax plays like gangbusters with an audience that may feel just a smidge guilty afterwards.

His superiors call it "the best worst-idea," but nobody else has a better one, so before long we're rolling with Affleck in the gilded age of 1970s Tinseltown, working with a very droll John Goodman (as Planet of the Apes makeup guru John Chambers) and the uproarious Alan Arkin (as a composite character molded from every gloriously tacky Hollywood stereotype) to polish one grandiose turd of a cover story.

Argo, named after this crummy sci-fi movie semifunded by the CIA, is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending show-biz satire with street-level suspense sequences. Affleck revels in grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking.

There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like the lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Argo's editing is slick and propulsive, seamlessly melding such disparate elements with a confident swagger. It looks easier than it probably was, which is what makes it so impressive.

Affleck once again proves himself a whiz with actors who aren't Ben Affleck. A murderer's row of supporting players fill out Argo, with the aforementioned Arkin and Goodman doing their most playful work in years. (I could've watched an entire movie of these two old pros barking obscenities at one another.) They're backed up by the always-reliable Bryan Cranston, plus brief but indelible turns from Kyle Chandler, Titus Welliver, Phillip Baker Hall and pretty much every other fantastic, under-utilized character actor working today.

The only speed bump here is the star/director himself, who—just as in The Town—can't resist soulfully moping for the camera while granting himself iconic shots nicked from John Ford movies. As the taciturn Mendez, Affleck attempts to project a gravity that he doesn't quite possess. You'll find yourself wishing he'd farmed out the role to executive producer George Clooney, or somebody equally comfortable with long silences. As is, there are too many scenes of our star somberly drinking alone, staring into the distance.

Affleck also draws out the ending more than necessary, straying from the historical record in order to goose the audience along for the ride. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. Almost unbearably suspenseful while bordering on the preposterous, the climax plays like gangbusters with an audience that may feel just a smidge guilty afterwards.

Regardless, the first two-thirds of Argo are sleek, machine-tooled Hollywood craftsmanship at its most entertaining, positioning Ben Affleck as a filmmaker to be reckoned with. That is a sentence I never thought I'd write. ×××

Kimbra tackles eclectic pop with lion-hearted exuberance.

Kimbra
plays at Royale on Oct. 24.

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE have hung on each emotive inflection of the female voice that challenges Gotye in his massive hit "Somebody That I Used to Know." And so did the woman who sang the duet.

"I sat there listening to my vocal takes for days, trying to refine and get it right," says Kimbra Johnson, the New Zealand upstart who performs under her first name. "He said, 'I want you to almost talk it and be really stripped back and passive, and try to keep all your emotions suppressed,' and that was really strange for me. Usually my vocals are a bit more 'out there.'"

This is clear in Kimbra's brashly eclectic debut, Vows, which was recorded before her Gotye collaboration but released four months later, in May. "In terms of production and vocal styles, I've tried to have it be really free and open-minded," says the coltish 22-year-old singer. "It's almost a primal approach."

Indeed, Kimbra soars from the jazzy Motown flavors of "Something in the Way You Are" and "Cameo Lover" to the syncopated vocal layers of "Settle Down" and the Nina Simone favorite "Plain Gold Ring." With production led by François Tétaz (Gotye) and Mike Elizondo (Regina Spektor), Kimbra slickly balances the arty and the accessible on Vows with every-thing-but-the-kitchen-sink touches that nod to her era-spanning inspirations.

> "I wanted to listen to different artists that were going to challenge me somehow."

Kimbra's early love for Broadway shows, jazz choir and Frank Sinatra was eclipsed by an interest in primal alt-rock at age 15, when someone handed her a mix CD that included the Mars Volta and Nine Inch Nails. "I was like, 'Wow, what is this?'" she recalls. "I just wanted to listen to experimental music all through high school. Whether it was Miles Davis or Kate Bush, I wanted to listen to different artists that were going to challenge me somehow."

When she took up the acoustic guitar in her early teens, Kimbra drew influence from the native Maoris who lived around her North Island city of Hamilton. "At my school, they'd play a lot of Maori songs that had this hard, rhythmic strumming," says the singer, whose album cover displays her body covered with Maori-like drawings. "I picked up a very percussive way of playing."

In turn, Kimbra borrowed an eight-track recorder from school, a turning point still reflected in her songwriting. "I made a CD and showed mum and dad what I'd done, and they were, 'Oh, that's crazy,' 'cause I'd done all these pitch shifters on my voice. Up until that point, I'd just been writing this pretty acoustic music."

Her parents encouraged her pursuits. "They got me with vocal coaching to make sure I was doing it right and not ruining my voice," Kimbra says.

At age 17, she was discovered by her manager, who arranged for Kimbra to move to Melbourne, Australia. A few years later, she was honored as Best Female Artist at the 2011 A.R.I.A. Awards, Australia's equivalent to the Grammys. Then came the Gotye breakout, which warmed up the American market. "I think it opened up doors for me to put out a record like Vows," she says from her tour bus, riding through Northern California.

She's currently inspired by the band Dirty Projectors, not only for their polyphonic vocals but also for mixing raw indie-rock with R&B and soul. "It's so exciting to see that happen, and to me, that isn't schizophrenic," says Kimbra, who's likewise a fan of Björk and Janelle Monáe. "There are moments on my record where I'm like, 'Ah, is this too odd?' Then I'll stop and think that's what feels right. I want to go with that and not stop halfway."

That full-charge investment especially comes through onstage, where Kimbra complements her vocal intensity with flamboyant baby-doll dresses and retro hairstyles that can seem almost cartoonish.

"I like contradictions," says the ebullient dynamo, who brings her grooving, punctuating four-piece band to Royale on Oct. 24. "I like the live performance to feel like an experience that goes further than what you might expect." ✖✖✖

GENDER RULES

On brilliant women

I'VE BEEN THINKING A LOT about women lately. This is nothing new for me. I have hundreds of female clients, and am lucky to have many women among my close friends. This, plus there are four extraordinary women in our small business crew, from whom I get feedback daily on many subjects. One of them said to me a few weeks ago, "My husband and I were at an outdoor concert recently, and there were four young women sitting on the lawn. Each of them had a small child in tow. The women were laughing with each other, high-fiving at times, totally absorbed in their friendships and the event. Not one of the women was wearing a wedding ring. I said to my husband, 'Do you think that men are becoming irrelevant?'"

I'm curious about this question. For years, my smart, single female clients have said to me, "My girlfriends and I are terrific, but what's wrong with the guys? Every guy I'm interested in is either married or gay."

"Life's not fair," I told her, "but sometimes it's unfair in your favor."

There seems to be a lot of interest in the relevance of men suddenly, if you look at the number of new books on the subject. I asked a friend about this, and she said, "I had an evil thought about this recently on a trip. The only thing I need a man for at an airport is to watch my bags when I go to the ladies' room." That's somewhat extreme, I thought. But the support women give to other women seems unique.

On a book tour, I spent an evening speaking with a group of professional women gathered together to network. Prior to my remarks, each person stood up, introduced herself, explained her career specialty and any needs she had that perhaps could be answered by her fellow attendees. As I watched, I thought, if this were a roomful of guys, maybe 10 percent would've been honest about their problems, their need for a job, for mentors, their desire to find an apartment in a different town. The women were so honest; their stories compelling. They'd follow up on what they promised.

I told one of my best friends about that dinner, and he smiled. "The men would leave an evening like that and say, 'These other guys have problems; issues of their own. They don't have time for my problems. It's all a bunch of bull. I'd never tell a room of strangers anything.'"

This is the basic "manning up," stiff upper lip approach. Almost never do I address a single-sex audience. But I'd advise all men in business to avail themselves of this opportunity whenever it arises. Make sure you have a question-and-answer session to really get the feedback that can change attitudes, particularly your own.

Prior to this event, I accidentally rubbed skin lotion into my right eye. How did I do this? It's a guy thing, I think. Stupid guy tricks. It kept tearing, and I kept rubbing it with a handkerchief. The organizer of the evening grabbed the microphone and said, "Anyone have some eye drops in their purse?" Five women approached the podium, all with small vials of eye solution. Who'd carry eye drops with them on an evening like this? I thought.

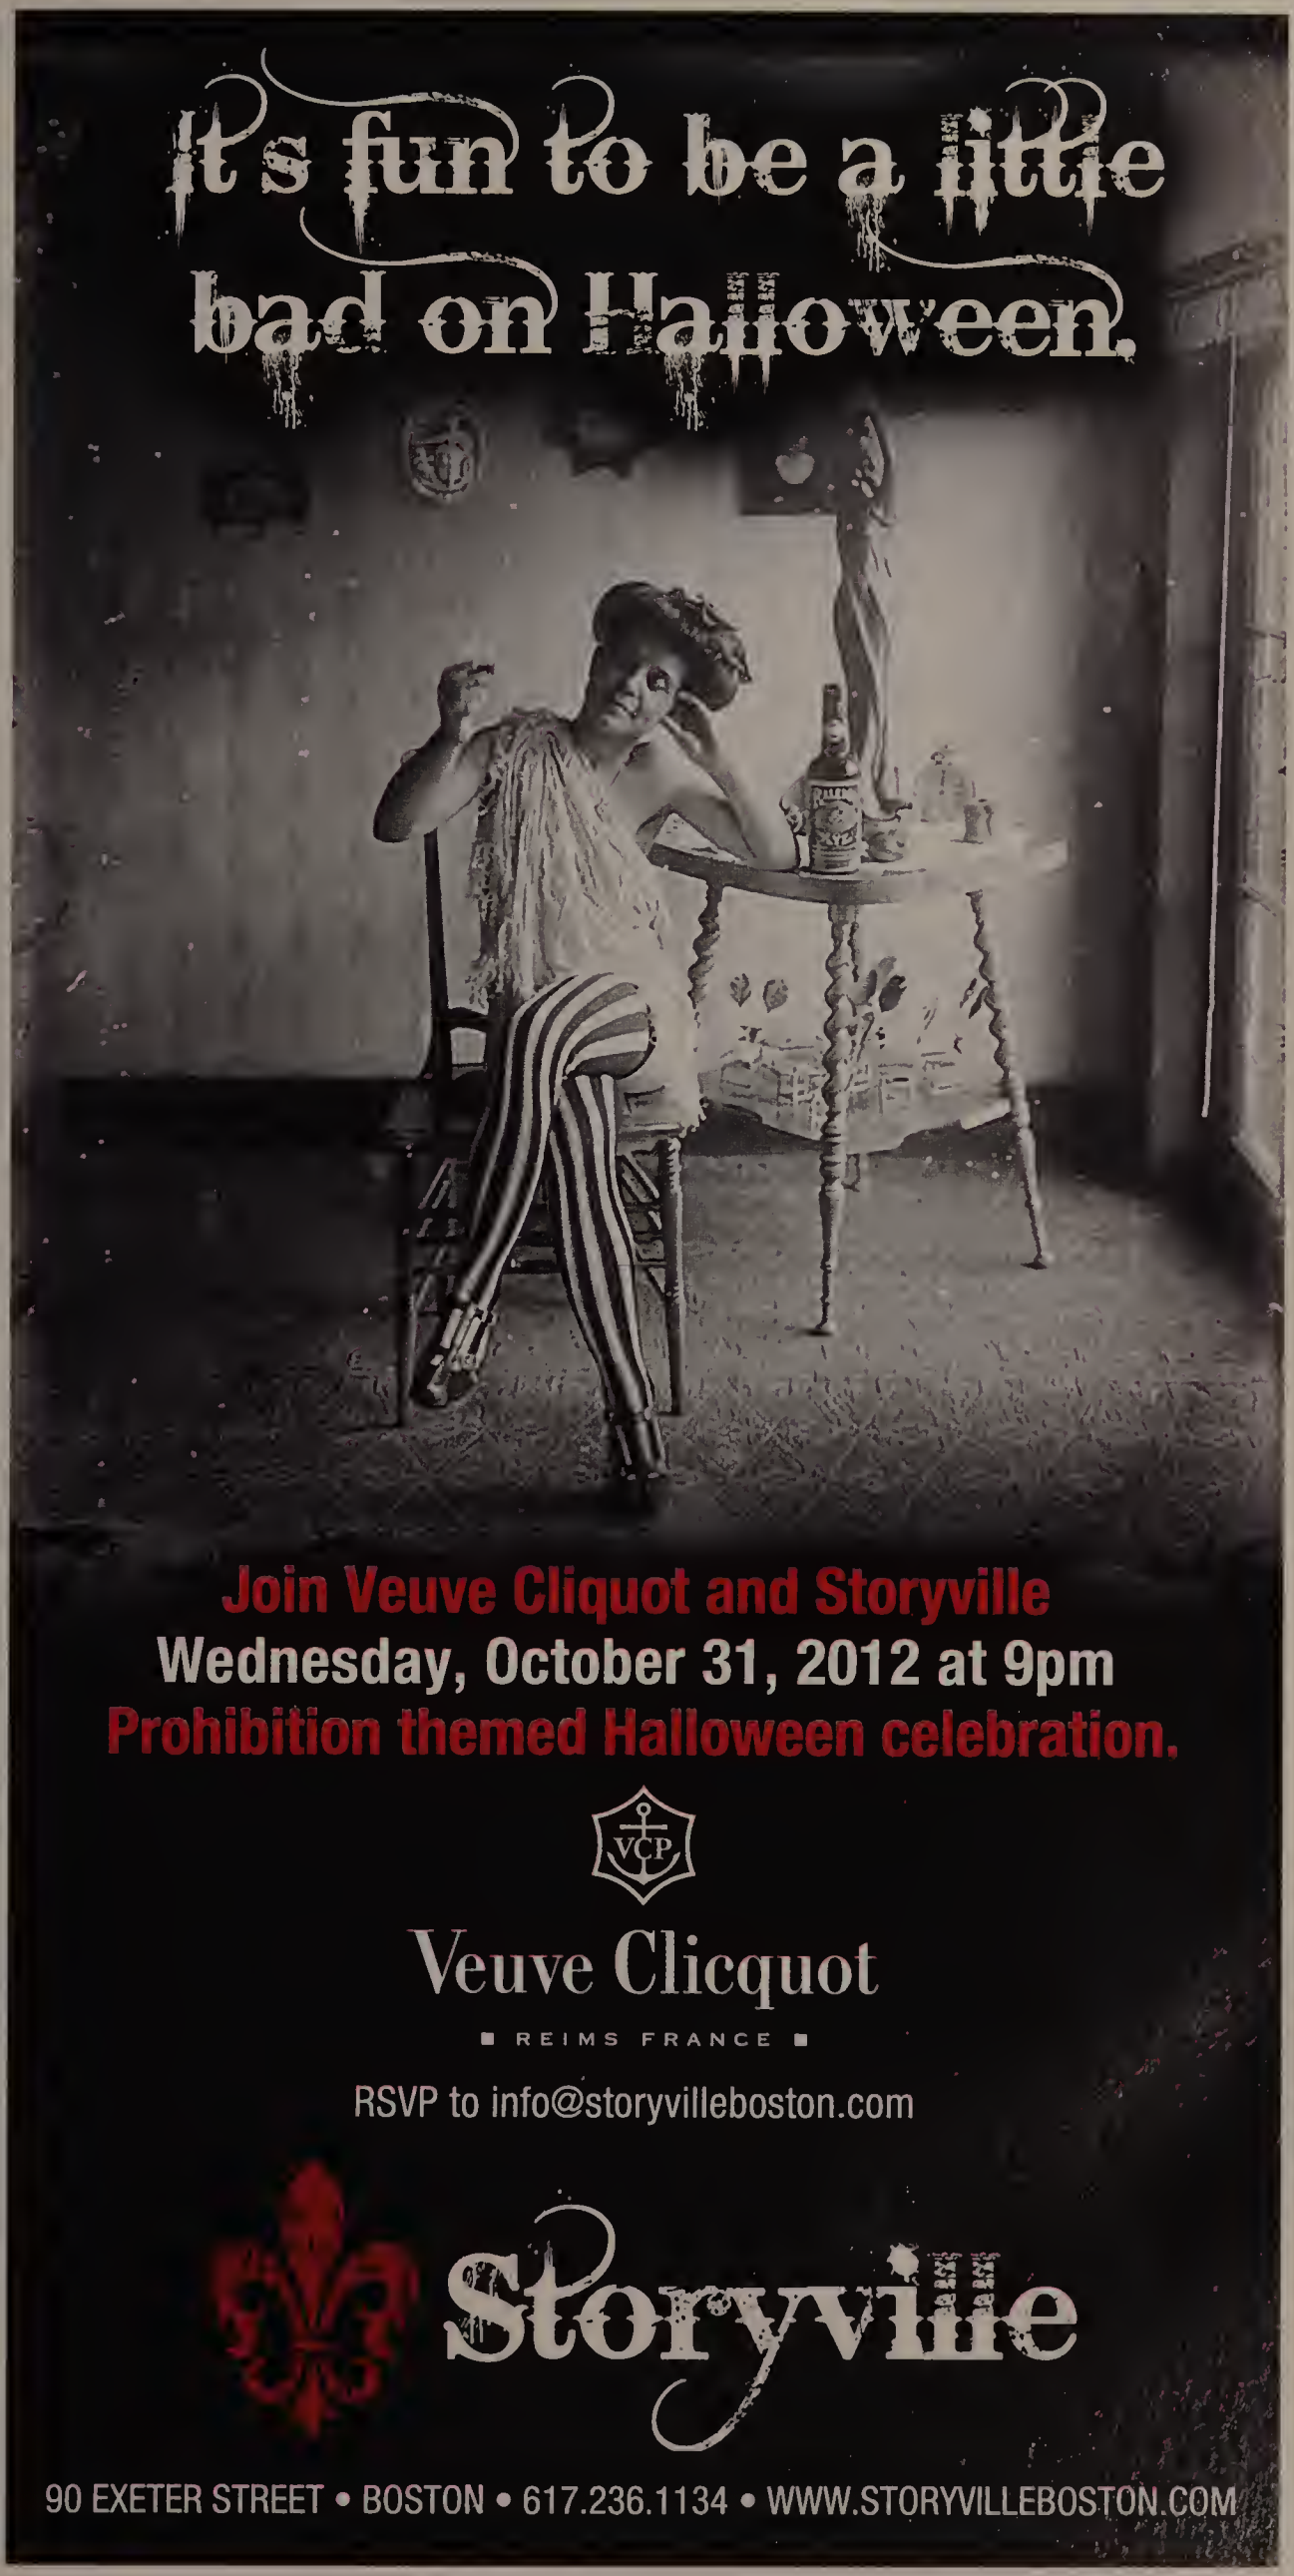
When my remarks were finished, the woman who gave me her eye drops came to the podium and handed me her business card. "I decided during your talk," she said, "that you need me as a resource. And I need you. What could be better in life than you scratch my back and I scratch yours?"

"Almost nothing," I answered. "Who scratches first?"

"I run human resources at a women's college," she said. "And I get a chance every day to hear what people are thinking about: politics, jobs, products of all kinds, education, demographics. This is all priceless for someone managing other people's money. Like you."

"OK," I said. "What's the other side of the trade? What do I do for you?"

The woman said, "I want to have lunch with you four times a year to teach me about the stock market. I can't save much money. Everything I've put aside is in retirement plans. Teach me, and after a year, we'll see if there's a balance, if it's an equal deal."

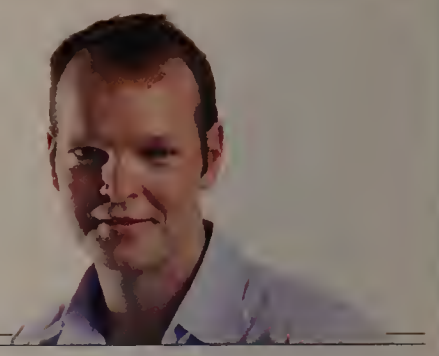


I shook her hand and said, "This is an unusual thing to propose."

"Worst case," she said, "you'd say you have no interest."

I'm glad she approached me, and it reinforced a lesson. Never leave a room wishing you had said something. You may never have the opportunity again. It's like an invitation you got that sounded great, but involved pain-in-the-neck travel. So you didn't go. And you regretted it. Don't look back and think, "I should've said something."

I asked another friend of mine, an executive, single and wise in the ways of the world, about the possible irrelevance of men. "Well," she said, "I've been reading The Morland Dynasty by Cynthia Harrod-Eagles and following the march of women for centuries. Women are now so much visibly stronger and 'out there' because so many are working outside of the house. We're flexing every muscle. And you know why? Money is power, baby."



I'll drink to that. But only if a woman joins me. ✖✖✖

AY, THERE'S THE RUB

A massage is cause for anxiety.

THE OTHER DAY I WAS perusing course listings for a community college (one should always have a backup plan) when I noticed a class called "massage ethics." I'd think this would be a pretty brief class. The instructor would walk in, point to the crotch on a mannequin and say, "Stay away from that area, unless you work at the kind of place that stays open suspiciously late." Class dismissed.

But I'd love to enroll in a class elucidating the etiquette on the other side of the transaction—the rules of the road for the massagee. Because massages involve a bizarre dance of procedure, parts of which I inevitably botch badly enough that I'm more stressed out after the massage than I was before it. And I know I'm not alone in my massage apprehension.

My brother-in-law, for instance, once scheduled a massage at a fancy hotel where you're provided with disposable paper underwear to don beneath your robe. Unsure of what to make of this item, he initially put it on his head, thinking that the leg holes were for your ears. He got it figured out before the masseuse walked in, or else I bet they'd still be talking about the nude guy with the underwear on his head.

Despite the apprehensions fueled by stories like that, I'm eventually forced back into a spa to redeem a 50-minute treatment that I received as a gift. I've barely opened my locker when anxiety sets in over whether to tip. I decide the answer is yes, but the bathrobe doesn't have pockets. Where should I put my money? I conclude that I should wear my boxers under the robe and tuck the cash into the waistband, thus solving two problems (the other being my apprehension over going commando under a robe that's been worn by 100 other naked dudes).

Flip-flops donned and cash in my underwear, I head to a darkened anteroom to await the masseuse and experience the mild existential dread caused by being alone with myself. In an Orwellian twist, this potpourri-scented alcove is called the relaxation room. Because nothing relaxes me like sipping lemon-tainted water and listening to whale noises while wondering whether I was supposed to shower.

Touchy subject

Nothing relaxes me like sipping lemon-tainted water and listening to whale noises.

You definitely shower after the massage, but what about before? Two showers? That seems a little much.

After 10 minutes or so, the masseuse fetches me, and we make our way to the actual room, where she bids farewell and instructs me to fully undress and get under the sheet on the table. This should be easy, but now I need to figure out how to hang the robe in such a way that I disguise the boxers. Since I also have no place for the cash, I carefully position it on top of the hook, using the weight of the robe and my boxers to hold the money in place. This robe-cash-underpants Tetris takes so long that when the masseuse knocks on the door, I have to tell her I'm not ready, which doubtless makes her wonder why my naked self is still prancing around her workspace instead of waiting beneath the sheet like a normal, non-weird customer.

That should be it for awkwardness. But now that the massage is upon us, I feel compelled to explain my bodily defects, specifically an ant bite that's caused my right ankle to swell to twice its normal size. In the center of my cankle is what looks like a zit, and I want her to know that it's not a zit but merely a severe reaction to ant venom, which I think seems less gross. "I got bit by an ant the other day," I say as casually as possible. "So you can ignore my right ankle. Not that ankles probably figure much in a massage, right?" She replies, "Uh, OK," in a way that lets me know that you're not supposed to draw attention to your physical deformities.

The rest of the massage is swell, except for the scalp part. Evidently it's considered a normal part of the regimen to rub oil on a guy's hair while ripping it from his head. I want to tell her to knock it off, but pride wins the day, and I suffer in silence as she accelerates my male-pattern baldness by five years. I imagine that when she's done she'll have hairy werewolf hands, and I'll look like Howie Mandel. So relaxing.

When it's all over, I'm actually pleasantly mellow and spaced-out—it turns out that I enjoyed the massage, if not the ceremony and whale songs. In fact, I'd like to get another one soon, so I called a less-fancy place and made an appointment. The only tough part will be staying up until midnight. ✖✖✖

Soroff On KATIE ASELTON

The star of The League tells us about acting versus directing, blueberry-picking and getting naked with Kate Bosworth.

ACTOR AND FILMMAKER KATIE ASELTON, 34, WAS BORN AND raised in Maine and attended Boston University. She stars in the fourth season of The League, the FX comedy about a fantasy football league, along with her husband and frequent collaborator, Mark Duplass. Aselton made her directorial debut with The Freebie, about a couple who give each other the chance to have a one-night-stand. She has also appeared in Our Idiot Brother, The Intervention, Cyrus and Easier With Practice. Her thriller Black Rock, in which she both stars and directs, is scheduled for a 2013 release, and also stars Kate Bosworth and Lake Bell. She and Duplass live with their two daughters in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Is The League the best show on television?
Katie Aselton: Is it Boardwalk Empire? No. Is it the funniest, snarkiest show that is painfully honest about friendships? Yes.

Do you belong to a fantasy football league?
Yes. The cast and creators all play in one together. And I'd like to point out that although my character on the show has never won, in real life, I have.

No. 1 draft pick?
I had the worst, stiest draft in history this year. I didn't do great research. I ended up with Cam Newton and Tony Romo as my two quarterbacks, who are so sting the bed this year. I don't want to talk about it. But the year I won, boy, it was beautiful.

How much of the show is improvised?
Probably about 90 percent. We're given outlines. Scenes are broken down into paragraphs that have a lot of information that has to be brought in to the scene. There are incredibly funny lines written for us, and if we choose to use them, great. Or we can use our own. Or they'll throw us lines while we're shooting.

That's a lot different than memorizing lines.
Yeah. It's not The Big Bang Theory, for sure.

Worst blooper you've had on the show?
I can't seem to stand on my feet. All of my bloopers are of me falling over. I'm not the world's most graceful human being.

How close are you to your character?
Disturbingly close. [Laughs.] Besides our smart-ass mouths, we both have a very competitive spirit, which can rub people the wrong way sometimes.

Is Kate Bosworth the prettiest human being you've ever seen?
She is an alien. She's so stunningly beautiful it's not possible that she's human. And she's a nice person, to boot.

In Black Rock, you got to huddle naked with her and Lake Bell. How many men have expressed their jealousy over that?
[Laughs.] I can't wait for this movie to come out to broad audiences. I think that it's going to start a whole new wave on Mr. Skin. Right before we shot that scene, I stopped and said, "What the f am I thinking? I'm going to be naked on film next to Lake Bell? Have you seen her body? This is ridiculous!" It was total panic.

How do you direct a scene when you're naked?
You do a lot of the work in advance, so you don't have to get up a lot.

Growing up in Maine, did you take time off from school to pick potatoes?
Blueberries. We lived in Blueberry Land. But we didn't take time off. School just started a little later.

Which is your favorite film festival?
Sundance, by far. There's an energy to it, a buzz that I've never felt at another film festival. It's also very supportive. Everyone wants to love the movies at Sundance.

Would you ever give Mark a hall pass, like in The Freebie*?*
No.

If he gave you one, who would you cheat with?
If Mark ever really messes up, then maybe I'll track down Ryan Gosling.

What's your best feature?
In terms of my character, the fact that more than anything I love to laugh. In terms of physically, I like my shoulders.

Film you wish more than anything that you had acted in or directed?
Tootsie. I would've loved to play Teri Garr's part or to have directed that film.

Do you prefer directing to acting?
It's apples and oranges. Directing is a collaboration, working with a whole bunch of people, and as an actor, you get a character and then dig your teeth in. Both are amazing.

Do you think you could outwit a bunch of homicidal veterans, like in Black Rock*?*
I think that what comes out in that movie is the ferociousness that is born out of loyalty and love. I feel that way as a mom. I feel that way as a friend. If anyone fed with anyone I love, I'd kill them. Yes. I'd turn into a lioness.

Did Deliverance influence Black Rock*?*
It was a direct influence. It stemmed from me watching that movie three years ago. I was like, "Why don't they make thrillers like this anymore?" It's just so simple and real and honest. It could happen. It's crazy and fed up, but it could happen. I'm not terrified that an albino is going to attack me while I'm spelunking. I just really don't see that happening. But this? It's within the realm of possibility, which is what makes it so scary.

How did you and Mark decide who was going to direct, etc.?
I had this idea of making a thriller, and I was really taking my time with it. We shaped the story together over a Christmas vacation in Maine. He had to fly back early for work, and got stuck in Colorado for 19 hours in a blizzard, so he wrote a rough first draft, and that was it.

How long before you score an Oscar?
Oh, jeez Louise! I don't know, but I want it to happen. I don't care if it takes 60 years but I want it. I held an Emmy the other day, and I was like, "Yeah, I like this." ✖✖✖

HERE'S TO LEAVING IT ALL BEHIND.

Escaping to THE SUBLIME

by LINH TRAN BRINCAT illustrations by THOMAS PITILLI

THERE WAS ONLY ONE THOUGHT ON MY MIND AS I DRIFTED 3,000 feet in the air, protected from a violent cactus-spiked landing by a wicker cage tied to a yellow and blue balloon. "Are those gunshots from the firing ranges?" I asked Captain Mike from Hot Air Expeditions. I had come to Scottsdale, Ariz., in search of the sublime—of the sort of experience that can render you paralyzed by your own mortal transience. To be in the presence of the sublime is to be near a terrifying majesty, and the Sonoran Desert, while considered young at only 10,000 years, was an intimidating sight, especially from some 200 stories up in the morning sky. Far, far below, foxes wended their way through thornscrub while, in the distance, a herd of burros kicked up dust at the base of centuries-old saguaro cacti.

They were utterly oblivious to the human drama happening half a mile above them, as a British couple next to me got engaged amidst tears and hugs. I was glad I hadn't ruined it when I asked them earlier if they were on their honeymoon, promptly causing the man to giggle nervously and change the subject. If the sublime tethers the emotions of terror and joy, then that young man certainly felt it, judging by the panicked, but jubilant, expression he wore as he gazed down at the landscape after the proposal.

I, on the other hand, was terrified but not joyous. There was something ridiculous about a man popping the question while gunshots threatened to burst our floating bubble. My inner English major found humor in the connection between the figurative and literal meanings of "pop." The rest of me was just worried about falling to my death. Thanks to Captain Mike's navigation, we didn't drop onto a shooting range, although we did hover for some time over the federal prison—long enough for me to become mesmerized by the moving cameras making their circuit around the barbed wire and wonder if providing inmates with a baseball diamond (and presumably bats) was a good idea.

Our landing gave me another opportunity to worry about not buying life insurance. The wind forced us to hit the ground at 10 miles an hour, skipping stones as we skidded along the ground like socks on waxed linoleum. Three large men hopped onto the side of the moving basket for counterbalance and prevented us from overturning. We had a lot to celebrate when they set up the breakfast table, and I hardly flinched when the Champagne was uncorked.

In the 19th century, Henry David Thoreau could still sequester himself in the woods outside Concord to experience nature's sublimity. It's nearly impossible today, when even the path to Mount Everest's summit is littered with water bottles and soda cans. In Scottsdale, the arid environment and gun-toting Arizonans share an uneasy peace—while it's legal to carry weapons, you can spend years in prison for destroying a saguaro. Greater Phoenix might rank as the fourth most populated county in America, but solitude, like any commodity in modern times, is available for a price.

The most spectacular view of my trip was from my balcony at Sanctuary at Camelback Mountain. Nestled at the base of Scottsdale's most prominent landmark, many of the luxury resort's suites afford dramatic views of the dromedary peak at dawn and dusk. A Frank Lloyd Wright-esque mix of modern and mountain, the resort's low-key architecture serenely blends into its surroundings, with touches like Frette linens and Red Flower bath products, and amenities like a spa with reflecting and Watsu pools, adding a pampered element that would no doubt have met with Thoreau's disapproval. But after my balloon experience, I basked in the feeling of being tended as if I were a Fabergé egg. I don't know what Thoreau would have written about the spa's signature body treatment, in which orange-blossom oil is raked through your scalp as if your head were a Zen garden. No doubt it would have challenged his ideals of simplicity. As would have the duck with black rice and cherry-braised cabbage at Elements, chef/owner Beau MacMillan's onsite restaurant. The Plymouth native's deft touch with Asian ingredients, involves drizzling black-bean sauce on the meat to playfully evoke the sweet and savory flavors of Peking duck, or combining Chinese sausage with warm squash for a take on an autumnal salad.

On Sanctuary's manicured grounds, there are no necessary inconveniences, like walking. Chauffeured golf carts are always at the ready to take guests from their massages to their suites. I had come to Scottsdale to find experiences outside of the tedium of everyday life, but all the hand-holding at Sanctuary seduced me to mistakenly believe that I—not just the opulent setting or service—was special. In Enlightenment philosophy, an experience with the sublime, an earthquake for example, makes people feel small, one of an innumerable many; it's only the contemplation of that experience from a safe distance that allows them to transcend their unimportance. Floating in Sanctuary's infinity pool, accessible all hours of the day and lit at night by a bonfire that gives its depths a blue glow, there's no need to transcend your insignificance through thought; there's no need to think at all, when you can dip a toe in indulgence.

Time to Reflect
A poolside evening at Scottsdale's Sanctuary

Rugged Edge
Enjoy a meal with a view at Elements.

The trip to Phoenix was a five-hour direct flight from Logan, but the growing pains of a city balancing the needs of its inhabitants with the majesty of its natural surroundings echoed those in Thoreau's own abandoned experiment. From my window seat on the plane, I saw grids of civilization push their order on the landscape around the red-ridged mountains, encroaching on, but not quite colonizing, the peaks. It looked as if nature had taken a temporary restraining order out against man, but the potential for violence lurked in the backdrop.

Everywhere I went, I was constantly warned of the dangers of dehydration, of how easily the desert can lull you into complacency and catch you unawares. Even the briefest journey required a slathering of sunscreen, a wide-brimmed hat and a pair of sunglasses. Thoreau might have ridiculed this kind of fearful communing with nature, but he would've also probably gotten skin cancer. Although Scottsdale's resorts give the impression of nature at her tamest and most welcoming, I caught glimpses of the sublime as I flew out of Arizona, in the indifferent, uninhabited mountains that extend as far as the eye can see. And in the realization that, try as civilization might, nature won't be subdued.

Escaping URBAN LIFE

Honest labor has its rewards at New Hampshire's Breakwind Farm.

AS A BOY, I'D SPEND A few weeks every summer at my uncle's farm. I slept in a loft above the kitchen, and in the mornings, a volunteer from the assemblage of feral cats would walk across my face to rouse me. The days were filled with chores designed to build my character and/or leave me damaged in some fashion. While cleaning the barn, I stabbed my foot with a manure-smeared pitchfork. Toppling from a bale of hay, I kneed myself in the face, causing my nostrils to spout like a sprung fire hydrant and my cousin to die of laughter. In the afternoons, we'd chase naked Amish men out of the pond and go fishing. We'd fry up perch; the felines would pounce at the gutted entrails; and in the morning the cats would be walking on my face again. As payment for my labor, my uncle gave me an envelope stuffed with $10 in dimes, which he found hilarious.

I have fond memories, which is why a farm stay seemed an appealing form of escape. Sheltered under the awkwardly stitched umbrella of agritourism, or, more horrifically, "agritainment," farm stays are designed for city dwellers that long for dirt under their fingernails. As this unhygienic trope has been pined for by anyone who's spent a day in a cube, agritourism has blossomed into a growth industry. Guided by my tetanus-infected inner child, I traveled to Breakwind Farm, makers of organic baked beans.

Off Route 127 in Hopkinton, N.H.—down river from a covered bridge built in 1853 and down the street from a Dunkin' Donuts displaying a photo of the county-record pumpkin (1,598 lbs.)—Breakwind seems your standard New England farmhouse from the front. The only clue to the inhabitants' real agrarian ambitions is a small unmanned farm stand with a cookie tin acting both as a cash register and a tribute to the honor system.

The sky was drizzling when I arrived, which put a damper on the afternoon's work, and when I entered the house I found the Breakwind team—one woman, two men, three ponytails—huddled around a game of Settlers of Catan. As I watched them barter imaginary sheep and wheat, we introduced ourselves. Rick MacMillan, 57, is a solar designer and installer, reps a seed company and had the idea for the baked bean business. Patti MacMillan, 52, works for a cable company, cooks the beans and invented the recipes (including Soothing Summer Breeze, prepared with kelp for less gas). David James, 30, was living with the MacMillans as a part of a work exchange. A South Carolinian coming off four years spent in Italy, James studied classics in Wales, organic farming in Sweden, and was able to work the cultivation theories of the Roman general Agricola into normal conversation.

A hawk coasts over a cornfield, and I remember the last bird I studied with any interest back in the city was a pigeon with a horrific skin growth.

As the weather cleared, we toured the backyard, the office/playground for the MacMillans, the work exchangers and whomever'd like to camp or RV by the Contoocook River for $25-$40 a night. There are trails for walking, a rope swing for swimming, a Frisbee golf course, a hot tub, a fire pit and a picnic table for diners chewed under the watchful eye of the neighbor's cows. And there are crops: pumpkins, strawberries, broccoli and hot peppers, and the wet aisles of tomatoes, potatoes and squash we strolled through while picking our supper.

This is a family passionate about clean living and healthful food. "We live in a world of drive-thrus and instant gratification," Rick says, eyeing his towering sunflowers. "It's good to know where food comes from." This is also a group found of wordplay. "Hi, honey," Rick says as we march into the house with the evening's menu. "We didn't bring home the bacon, but we brought the beets." We fill our bellies with homemade vegetable soup, roasted squash, beets and fingerlings, with hefty, aromatic spoonfuls of Fiery Texas Tornado baked beans on the side. James has baked fresh bread. "You thought he was just loafing around," Rick says. "I'm working for crumbs here," says James.

After dinner, the home is quieter than a scarecrow. Built in 1790, the house belonged to Rick's parents, and the hardwood and horsehair plaster seal in the evening silence. 7:30 pm in the woods has that detached, otherworldly stillness you rarely catch in the city, and it's that sensation, that restructuring of reality, that Patti, a native of Jamaica Plain, wants their guests to experience. In return, part of a worker's responsibility is to bring one's own passions to Breakwind. Rather than making a full escape from your normal life, you're repackaging it, as a houseguest might bring a gift upon arrival. "People who have farms, they live vicariously through the travelers," says Patti. "We get to learn from cultures from all over the world that most people wouldn't be able to afford to go to."

In the morning, after organic waffles, Rick speechifies on corporate conspiracies regarding solar power, and James and I thrust our hands into the soil, harvesting a row of potatoes known as Russian bananas. "Sometimes you feel like a Russian peasant," he says, hunched over the dirt. "I like to think that."

Before lunch, I go for stroll by the river, swinging a stick into the tall grass like a 10-year-old. A hawk coasts over a cornfield, and I remember the last bird I studied with any interest back in the city was a pigeon with a horrific skin growth. There's still work to be done, but here my sense of deadlines has been restructured. Frost covers need to be laid out, but only before the sun goes down. Until then, I'm free to kayak.

In the afternoon I pack up with a sheen of sweat on my back and my fingernails appropriately laden with earth. In thanks for my labor, I'm given a pint of Jumping Jalapeño beans and a T-shirt marketing Breakwind's varieties as "fartootempting," which I find hilarious. Driving back to the office, the brevity of my escape grows clearer with each mile ticked closer to the city. But, if I've done my job correctly, I've left a memory of my normal life behind.

Escaping the NOISES IN MY HEAD

by JONATHAN SOROFF

NOT ALL GREAT ESCAPES require a passport, sunscreen and a wad of cash. In fact, according to its practitioners, one of the most intense journeys you can take in life requires nothing more than a cushion and a quiet room.

According to some sources, Buddha claimed there were 83,000 ways to meditate. The one I chose was to visit the Shambhala Meditation Center of Boston for one of their weekly open houses, where the uninitiated are offered guidance and instruction in meditation.

Legend holds that there was an ancient enlightened kingdom called Shambhala, where the first sovereign, King Dawa Sangpo, ruled over a wise, compassionate people using teachings handed to him directly by the Buddha. The tradition holds that in modern times, the heir to these ideals was the Tibetan meditation master, Chogyam Trungpa Rinpoche, whose lessons are dedicated to awakening kindness, goodness and wisdom in the world. The Shambhala Center, tucked away near Brookline Village in a non-descript building that could just as easily house a dentist's office, is a part of this global community.

I arrived not knowing what to expect, and was greeted by people so uniformly welcoming, warm and soft-spoken they could have been manning the intake desk at McLean's. I was happy that I'd remembered to take my Klonopin. There were 20-30 people, at least 10 of them newbies like me. After chatting in the lobby, everyone moved upstairs, and those of us who required instruction went into a room and sat on navy blue cushions, facing a shrine.

I was happy I'd remembered to take my Klonopin.

Our instructor told us to sit cross-legged and erect, but not rigid, our hands resting gently on our thighs. We were to concentrate on nothing but our breath, but unfortunately for me, the shrine was too interesting not to look at, with its crystal ball sitting atop a silk tuffet, a seashell and other distractions. That, and the fact that I was hungry and looking forward to the roast chicken waiting for me at home made it difficult to clear my mind.

But I tried. I set my gaze to an indistinct point and listened to my breath, which I have experience doing from practicing yoga. And I immediately became sleepy.

As the instructor said, "The goal is not to zone out. Otherwise, everyone who rode the bus would be enlightened."

I also wanted to fidget. And that damn crystal ball was just sitting there begging me to glance at it. And I could smell that roast chicken waiting for me at home.

Following our instruction, we joined the larger group in a room where we sat in a circle and listened to a lesson about "gentleness, nowness, and curiosity." Ignoring the fact that "nowness" is not a word, it was an interesting conversation, largely common sense, about the ways in which we can all engage with the world in a kinder, more compassionate way, despite the existence of things like coworkers, insincere customer service representatives and Massachusetts drivers.

Then we split into pairs for a give-and-take exercise about how all of this pertained to our own lives before ending with a reception that I excused myself from to rush home to that roast chicken.

So did I attain oneness with the universe? No. But I learned at least two things. 1) It's best not to meditate on an empty stomach, and 2) Enlightenment doesn't come when you call it.

I'll just have to keep on practicing.

THERE'S A LENS FOR THAT

It's hard enough to find space in a carry-on for those mini airplane-safe shampoos, let alone a chunky camera. But with add-on technology, your iPhone can capture every unforgettable moment of your escape without weighing you down.

EMILY TANNENBAUM

1 PHOTOJOJO PHONE LENS SERIES $49
What it is: The fisheye (for 180 degrees views with a fishbowl feel), telephoto (for long-focus without the pixilation) and wide angle/macro (two-in-one for peripheral landscapes and intense detail) lenses.

Why it's awesome: It has the photo power to capture the whole family—and the Grand Canyon, and that goat at the bottom of it.

2 THE SLINGSHOT $20
What it is: A stabilizing grip that opens up into a small tripod.

Why it's awesome: Now you can shoot stable videos and clear pictures with the steadiness of someone totally sober.

3 THE IPHONE SHUTTER REMOTE $40
What it is: A strap-on shutter that clings to the phone.

Why it's awesome: It allows you to take photos from farther away at the press of a button (instead of a tap of the screen). That is, if you can bear to be that far from your phone.

Why it's awesome: Capture all the action without craning your neck or looking like a fool spinning around in a circle.

Escaping the ELECTION SEASON

by ANDREW AIMAS

IN THE BATHroom of our hotel suite, I felt the distance between worlds. Montreal is a mere five-hour drive from Boston, but, in that sterile, glass-walled cubicle, facing the Toto Washlet with integrated toilet, I knew what it meant to stand on the shore of San Salvador and see a galleon crest the horizon.

"People like to post YouTube videos of it," smiled the woman from the Ritz-Carlton's marketing department.

I laughed, but I was terrified. This toilet was possessed of higher powers. When I stepped into the cubicle, it raised its lid in an automated salute. And while a heated seat is a relatable luxury, three different settings for personal cleaning jets and a temperature-adjustable dryer is a miracle out of a Philip K. Dick story. The toilet would have to be approached with respect. And caution.

Back home, if a toilet tried to interact with me, it'd be reason to call a plumber, possibly a priest. In Montreal, it just reminded me that the world isn't ringed by I-495.

NAME A COUNTRY, THEN CONSIDER the first image that springs to mind. Japan, Croatia, Nepal. You get a mental flipbook of stereotype (violin prodigies, picturesque coastlines, monks). Russia, Madagascar. Furry hats, lemurs. It's a distillation of the pictures in grade school geography class, in Tintin comics. A Belgium of high quality chocolate. A Saudi Arabia of sexism. A Nagorno-Karabakh of… I have no idea.

And what about our closest neighbor? I can no longer think of Canada without envisioning a martini glass containing a clear potion of vodka, Cointreau, coriander, ginger syrup and white cranberry juice, chilled by a sphere of ice inside of which blooms, as if trapped in amber, a single pink orchid.

An ornate cocktail isn't reflective of the typical Canadian stereotypes (superior health care, low crime, beavers). But a recent weekend in Montreal etched a set of fresh assumptions on my mind, largely ones grounded in the fact that Canada ranks in the top 10 of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development's report on the "happiest" countries in the world (the U.S. does not). My epiphany started the way most epiphanies unroll into the conscious, by remembering that the universe is about 93 billion light years wide, in all of which it's impossible to avoid advertising.

It started in September. Election season had begun to weigh on my spirits like a limestone blanket. The overwrought voiceovers on TV, the hysterical headlines, the depressing quotes from undecided voters—it made me pine for the liberation of being illiterate, deaf and standing in a 10-foot deep hole. It was time to get away. Since I'm shamefully unversed in French, I figured a weekend in Quebec would be a good way to escape. Seeing an "Arrêt" sign at an intersection was just the sort of reminder I needed that there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamt of in basic cable programming.

THE RITZ-CARLTON MONTREAL is the original Ritz-Carlton. (Though it's not the original Ritz. That pedigree belongs to a place in Paris.) Exactly 100 years ago, the property launched on the presumption that people would pay top nightly rates for a private bathroom. Straddling a desirable block in the desirable neighborhood called the Golden Square Mile, the hotel hosted everyone from Douglas Fairbanks to Winston Churchill to Mick Jagger. In 2008 it closed, to reopen this spring after $200 million in surgery, sinking it in plush carpets and grafting a Daniel Boulud restaurant onto its flank. The lobby remains a study in white marble, with plain lines, a curved stairway built to show off ladies' ball gowns as they sweep downstairs, and a reliance on polish. The Palm Court, with its ceiling painted with fronds and parakeets, still feels like a backdrop to an Evelyn Waugh novel. But the Japanese garden in the back courtyard is lifted from modern Tokyo, and Maison Boulud is relentlessly of-the-moment, down to the textiles on the walls and the lobster lasagnette with cipollini. If you head up to the eighth floor you can see the Royal Suite, a grandiose apartment of giant baths and unexpected sitting rooms. Elizabeth Taylor married Richard Burton for the first time here, and despite the remodeling, the apartment still has a sepia air.

But, of course, the toilets are the first point of interest. They're even self-cleaning. The rooms also sport automated window shades, century-old marble fireplaces and Bose sound systems. These are the sort of suites in which the bathtubs are too deep for you to get a proper view of the flatscreen television next to the sink (the angle's better from the walk-in rain shower).

Next year, the rooftop swimming pool is due to open, but for the moment the best reason to visit the Ritz-Carlton is Maison Boulud, the cuisine of which makes that of other contemporary French restaurants look like gum scraped off a shoe with a stick. The dining room, designed by hotshot Japanese architecture firm Super Potato, shimmers with a mirrored gas fireplace and chandeliers made of inverted crystal goblets, while the bar thrums with the well-to-do and dapper. It's there you can order the cosmopolitain de l'orient, cooled by an iced orchid. The menu leans heavily on spectacle: burrata appears in a nest of woodsy chanterelles; venison chops glow with a garnet sheen. But a simple side dish of fried artichoke hearts tastes just as spectacular as an intricate confection of cherries sautéed in Kriek beer and framed with a pistachio tuile.

The Ritz-Carlton is a melding of Old Montreal charm with ruthless, intimately cleansing technology, but the dichotomy between history and the present is nowhere more extant than a five-minute drive away in l'Auberge Saint-Gabriel, a restaurant/nightclub set in a 17th-century inn said to be the oldest in North America. In 1769, the building received the first liquor license in Quebec under British rule; today the sommelier pours British Columbian fortified wine that could thumb its nose at the snootiest casks from Oporto. Stepping into the colonial stone structure (a bouncer stands at attention during nightclub hours), a guest's first impression is of determined cool, and of a whale's backbone, stretching up two stories through the center of the bar. Next to the restrooms, a pair of taxidermied moose stand headless, conjoined at the neck like a Dadaist statement on bourgeois concepts of biology. The cuisine, however, is deeply serious, if a giant "egg in snow"—a globe of sweet foam encrusted with candied nuts and draped with two velvety dessert sauces—counts as less whimsical than delicious. Which it is.

While the menu tinkers with traditional Quebecois fare like homemade charcuterie and local cheeses, it takes flight when it takes chances. A chateaubriand appears in two stages: a traditional filet with wild mushrooms, and a masterly "evolution" of braised tenderloin served in a martini glass with whipped potato, bacon and truffles. (Order this. It's reason enough for the 10-hour round trip.) The wine list trumpets the surprising virtues of Canadian bottles, or you could just drink a glass of beer on one of the barstools embroidered with the coat of arms of the Royal 22nd, a francophone Canadian regiment. Then, if you need a further reminder that you're in a foreign country, step into the men's room and take note of the dental floss dispenser. Montrealers, it turns out, aren't just overdeveloped in cuisine and hospitality. They have high standards of oral hygiene.

Of course, there are familiarities, too. Walking past the endless boutiques on Rue Saint-Denis, or by the jewelry shops on Sherbrooke, the brands are all familiar from Newbury Street. True, the signs are French, but a venti in Starbucks is still a venti. Even the famed Montreal smoked meat sandwiches taste suspiciously familiar, like pastrami that's taken seasoning lessons from a hot dog. And poutine, nowadays, is a staple in every gastropub in Boston. Might as well just call it curds, gravy and freedom fries.

I called a friend who works for a Canadian political party and asked him about our civilizational differences. Apart from the usual jokes about canoes and medical marijuana, he didn't come up with a whole lot. He did complain, however, that Canada's manufacturing sector has been hit hard by the downturn in the U.S. economy. "It's time you guys started buying some stuff. You could really stand to be more materialistic, you know."

Back at the Ritz-Carlton, the Toto Washlet roosts in its aerated chamber, spritzing itself, its sensors primed like an Air Force drone. It, like Montreal, is businesslike, contemporary. It, like Canada, is modern. xxx

Castle on a Cloud

Old Tricks Academy Award–winning Japanese director Hayao Miyazaki's film Howl's Moving Castle is a modern-day fairy tale with legs. The young and friendless Sophie is spellbound by the charm of a notoriously handsome wizard, Howl, voiced by Christian Bale. But when an envious witch transforms her into an old, unsightly woman, Sophie is worried her romance will be spoiled. Embarrassed by her appearance, she flees to Howl's four-legged roaming castle, hoping that the powerful sorcerer can help break her free from the curse and regain her adolescence. Become enchanted yourself on Oct. 20 at ArtsEmerson. Sarah Hagman

Reviews by Sean Burns

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (At Coolidge Corner, Somerville, West Newton Cinema and the suburbs.)

The Avengers ★★★ It was a rough takeoff. After five movies of buildup, the often crummy (see Thor, Iron Man 2, The Incredible Hulk) but occasionally wonderful (Captain America: The First Avenger) Marvel Films' strategy of building a bridge to nowhere at last pays off with a rock 'em, sock 'em, superhero spectacular, in which Earth's mightiest heroes team up to take on an alien invasion in midtown Manhattan. Playing out like a fanboy's nocturnal emission, we finally get to see what would happen if Iron Man fought Thor. But what makes the picture click is writer/director Joss Whedon's knack for snappy banter, as he supplies killer one-liners to Robert Downey Jr.'s debauched Tony Stark and plays to the fissure between Mark Ruffalo's laid-back line readings and his gigantic green alter ego. Massively scaled, coldly impersonal set pieces abound, but the character interactions zing. Whedon isn't much of an action director, but he's gifted with an overqualified cast and allows them to quip away to their hearts' content. (At Brattle.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Bourne Legacy ★ In 2007, Matt Damon and director Paul Greengrass brought amnesiac assassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (In the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (At Somerville.)

Dredd ★★★ Weirdly pedigreed for such a down-and-dirty B-picture, Dredd was scripted by novelist Alex Garland and shot by groundbreaking cinematographer Antony Dod Mantle. For a movie that consists mostly of people getting shot in the face, it's much wittier than expected. As the title character, a sneering, killing machine in a post-apocalyptic dystopia, Karl Urban's performance is particularly droll. Eyes obscured by doofy-looking headgear, working strictly with a scowl and often hilariously rigid body language, he makes that Robocop reboot that's in the works seem awfully unnecessary. There's a perverse integrity to Dredd's nastiness. You'll keep waiting for them to try and soften up the character, or maybe just stop blowing people's heads off. No dice. Olivia Thirlby, working by Urban's side and doing a passable Milla Jovovich imitation, is on hand to supply the inevitable crisis of conscience, ever so slightly acknowledging that this is all just a queasy police-brutality–empowerment fantasy. But as far as such things go, it's kind of a hoot. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

End of Watch ★ ½ Training Day screenwriter David Ayer's third directorial effort unfortunately attempts to yoke his hard-boiled cop routine to that ever-wearying found-footage craze. The gimmick here is that beat cop Brian Taylor (Jake Gyllenhaal) is taking a night class in documentary filmmaking, so he and partner Mike Zavala (Michael Peña) wear buttonhole video cameras in their uniform pockets, and the whole movie jerks around in a fish-eyed, low resolution blur. Trying to follow the action made me so nauseated, I had to take a break halfway through and walk around the lobby just to keep from throwing up. Gyllenhaal and Peña have a relaxed rapport behind the wheel of a squad car, even if the baby-faced Gyllenhaal is never remotely credible as a steroidal knucklehead. Grandiose cartel baddies carry gold-plated AK-47s, conveniently videotaping their crimes for no other reason than that the movie needs us to see them. Improbable set-pieces and overscaled shoot-outs ensue, with the jagged YouTube aesthetic only underlining the phoniness of all these Hollywood clichés. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Expendables 2 ★★★ Of course it's garbage. Though the original was a surprise smash in 2010, Sylvester Stallone makes the sequel—a throwback to pre-CGI days, when manly men delivered terrible one-liners while laying waste to foreign countries—with an unnecessary gloss. The appeal of the first *Expendable*s had a lot to do with Stallone's low-rent filmmaking style, but here he's handed the reins to Con Air director Simon West, who puts far too much of a slick Hollywood polish on the proceedings. Yet my heart still swelled with joy when I watched the icons of my youth blowing stuff up, shredding henchmen with automatic weapon fire and stealing each other's catchphrases. Like I said, garbage, but my favorite kind of garbage. (In the suburbs.)

For a Good Time, Call... ★ ½ Don't expect anything titillating from this alleged sex comedy, penned by actress/writer/Mrs. Seth Rogen Lauren Miller. For a Good Time, Call... focuses on a couple of unlikely roommates, played by Miller and Ari Graynor. They're a hapless pair, seen with a seriously unfunny callback to college escapades involving urine, and now they're managing to cover the rent on a swanky Manhattan apartment by running a phone-sex line. Obviously in this picture, the Internet hasn't been invented yet. Miller is the uptight goody-goody, an anonymous screen presence at best, while Graynor—who has a certain Bette Midler–ish comic quality—prances around in tight leopard-print clothes "exercising" on a stripper pole. Guess which one turns out to be a virgin in this movie's weirdly prehistoric parlance? Directed by Jamie Travis, For a Good Time, Call... is all loud colors and exaggerated reaction shots. It's so busy being shocked and snickering about the audacity of its subject matter that the audience need not bother. (In the suburbs.)

Hope Springs ★★ ½ Tommy Lee Jones' rumpled poker face gets one hell of a workout in this almost-decent tale of marriage counseling by The Devil Wears Prada director David Frankel. Meryl Streep stars as a sexually frustrated housewife who signs herself and her hubby (Jones) up for intensive couples therapy in a Maine resort town. Steve Carell plays the shrink dead straight, smartly allowing questions about companionship and sex to ricochet off Streep's and Jones' sublime reaction shots. More melancholy than expected, Hope Springs wonders what happens when the thrill is gone. The movie takes the unfulfilled libidos of its AARP couple seriously, and it's unusual to see such frankness regarding characters of a certain age. (Meryl Streep gives oral? In a movie theater?) Unfortunately, Frankel is still a terrible filmmaker, and he slathers the soundtrack with a catalog of overplayed pop standards and resorts to a hokey montage every 10 minutes or so. Streep is predictably marvelous, but Jones' gruff, deadpan bleats steal the picture. (In the suburbs.)

Lawless ★★ In case you'd finally sorted out all of Bane's muffled, fey-Connery proclamations in The Dark Knight Rises, director John Hillcoat's Lawless provides another challenge in Tom Hardy dialogue recognition. Lawless is based on Matt Bondurant's 2008 book, The Wettest County in the World, an account of his family's bloody romp through the moonshine business in the 1930s. Scripted by murder balladeer Nick Cave—who previously collaborated with Hillcoat on The Proposition in 2005—Lawless seems torn between being a fanciful gangster melodrama and a harsher, more punitive film. Nobody wins. Hardy stars as the almost mythological Forrest, a quiet inspiration of terror among neighborhood locals, all of whom buy into the legend that he's some kind of immortal. (He's Tom Hardy, after all.) Playing the runt of the Bondurant litter, Shia LaBeouf is such a contemporary screen presence that you keep expecting him to whip out an iPhone and start texting from behind the wheel of his jalopy. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Looper ★★★ Writer/director Rian Johnson's nifty, time-bending thriller stars Bruce Willis as the future Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The latter plays a hit man for the mob, knocking off targets beamed back to 2044 from 30 years hence. Except for one fateful day when he's supposed to shoot…himself? Johnson's intriguingly lo-fi vision of the future is full of vintage blunderbusses, designer drugs and a tricky maze of paradoxical timelines. Jeff Daniels drops by for a hilarious supporting turn as a bored gangster from the future, but the main event is Gordon-Levitt's uncanny Willis impersonation. He's got the squint and the sneer down pat, making his distracting prosthetic nose somewhat unnecessary. Johnson, who helmed the terrific art-house oddity Brick and the significantly less charming Brothers Bloom, tries to keep the sci-fi elements grounded with rural farmhouses and workaday diners. He bites off a bit more than he can chew, but kudos to Willis for tweaking his own iconography and heading into waters much darker than initially expected. A clever, crafty little picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (In the suburbs.)

The Paperboy ★★★ Precious director Lee Daniels' hysterically overheated adaptation of Pete Dexter's novel became notorious at the Cannes Film Festival because of a scene where Nicole Kidman pees on Zac Efron. That's not even the weirdest part. The suddenly unstoppable Matthew McConaughey stars as a good ol' boy returning to his swampy Florida home to investigate the murder of a corrupt sheriff. An awful John Cusack plays a cretin who just might be wrongly accused. Kidman headlines as his beloved, in a campy, white-trash tour de force, while Efron roils around in an unrequited hormonal frenzy. To call the movie lurid would be an understatement. It's a sweaty, cheerfully disreputable picture that offhandedly says more about race relations than The Help tried to shout from rooftops. Macy Gray narrates as the maid who's seen it all, and her maternal relationship with Efron provides the only ray of light in this dark and nasty noir, one that's really more about social marginalization than any mystery. Shame about that ending. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall and in the suburbs.)

ParaNorman ★★★ ½ ParaNorman doesn't strive to replicate Steven Spielberg's 1980s Amblin Entertainment pictures. It just naturally belongs in that group. From Laika studios (who brought us Coraline a few years back), this is a rousing adventure full of big scares, goofy humor and a pointed message. It's like what The Goonies might've been, if The Goonies had been beautifully animated and not terrible. Kodi Smit-McPhee voices the title character, Norman Babcock, a lonely adolescent outsider with a Chia-pet hairdo who sees dead people. It's unfair to reveal more, as the surprise and delight of Chris Butler's screenplay lies in its sharp turns. That's the unexpectedly thoughtful thing about ParaNorman. The movie keeps upending your expectations, urging you to look beyond the surface. (In the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–styled sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female songstresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throwaway one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

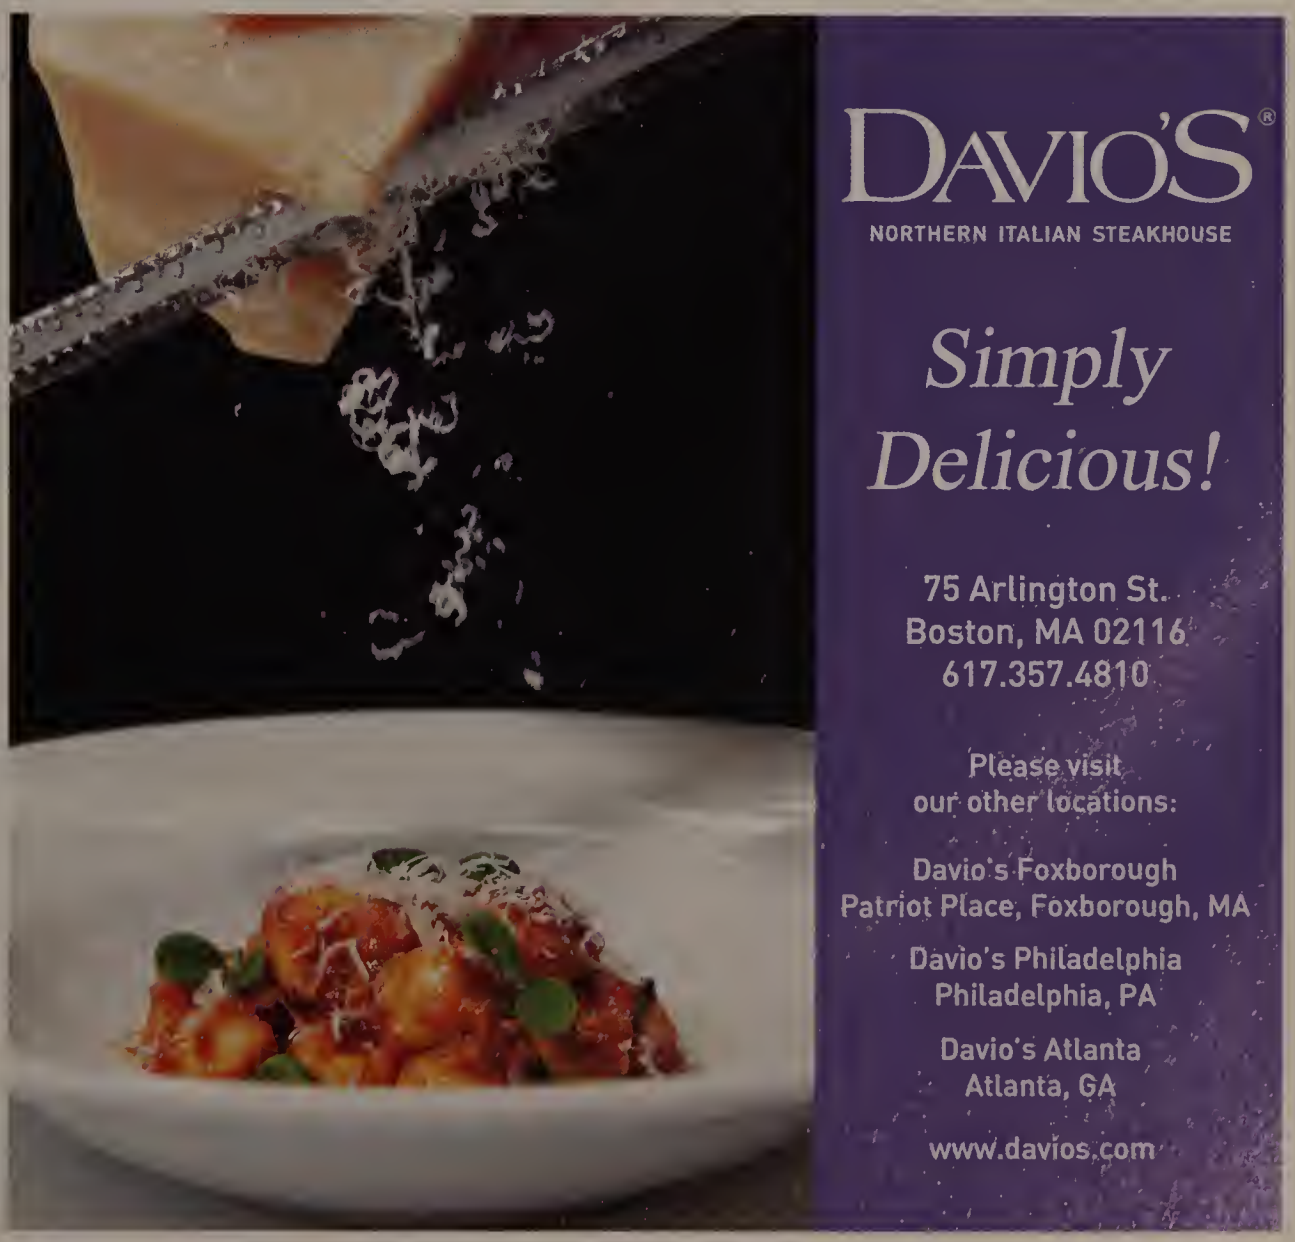
The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (In the suburbs.)

Seven Pyschopaths ★★★ Playwright Martin McDonagh's second feature film dearly wants to be a poison letter to all the swaggering stereotypes that put food on his table. A vicious Irish Catholic with a punitive temperament, McDonagh seeks to bite the hand that feeds, casting Colin Farrell as a drunken screenwriter (naturally named Martin) who falls in with a couple of low-rent dog-nappers (Sam Rockwell and Christopher Walken), who make their living hustling pooches from the tar pits, eventually returning the canines to grateful owners and cashing sizeable reward checks. Problems arise when they swipe a shih tzu from an emotionally imbalanced crime-lord played by Woody Harrelson, and then all the wrong people get murdered. It's a silly, stupid series of contrivances over a dumb little dog, which I think is probably McDonagh's point. Seven Psychopaths aims to mock a culture of potty-mouthed gangster-wannabes who have seen too many movies, calling out the viewer for engaging in such adolescent empowerment fantasies—while at the same time working pretty well as an example of the genre. A neat trick. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sleepwalk With Me ★★ Otherwise known as NPR Goes to the Movies, Sleepwalk With Me was produced by hipster godhead Ira Glass and takes a great 10 minutes or so of radio and stretches it out to an 80-minute running time, with no idea what to do with the visuals. You've probably heard the plot by now. I believe it started on The Moth spoken-word circuit, before Glass picked it up for his radio show. Short version: Mike Birbiglia is an aspiring stand-up comic not in love with his fiancée, and his anxiety manifests itself in a weird sleepwalking disorder. Weeks on the road precipitate a somnambulistic breakdown, and he has to make a few life choices. The end. This is a great radio bit, and Birbiglia has a conversational tone that's awfully ingratiating. Problem is that somebody decided to make his story a movie. Birbiglia spends the early reels talking directly into the camera, and the DIY aesthetic reeks of amateur hour. Nobody bothered to outsize this interior monologue into an actual motion picture. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Taken 2 ★★ ½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie coldbloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark



Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (In the suburbs.)

To Rome With Love ★★ ½ Last year's Midnight in Paris was profound in a breezy way. To Rome With Love is just plain breezy, but I didn't mind. Charming, second-tier Woody Allen, the film is a mashup of four disconnected shorts. (The picture sometimes feels as though Allen was rifling through his desk and came across some unfinished New Yorker pieces and decided to fashion them after the Italian omnibus films of the 1960s.) It's good to see Allen back on screen, kvetching and complaining his way through a Roman holiday when he discovers a brilliant opera singer who can only perform in the shower. There's some silliness with Roberto Benigni as an everyman who becomes inexplicably famous, and some bawdy jokes by Penélope Cruz as one of Allen's genius prostitutes. Best in show goes to Alec Baldwin as an aging architect revisiting his wayward youth and watching a younger version of himself make all the same mistakes. Clumsily stitched together, To Rome With Love is a trifle, but it's an agreeable one. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Trouble With the Curve ★★ ½ Clint Eastwood is never less than delightful in Trouble With the Curve, an otherwise lousy movie helmed by his longtime assistant director Robert Lorenz. The octogenarian icon stars as a crotchety baseball scout trying to cling to his job with the Atlanta Braves, despite the fact that he's obviously going blind. There's nobody better at being a curmudgeon, and Eastwood growls and cusses before displaying stray moments of unexpected delicacy. His semi-estranged daughter, Mickey (named for Mantle, naturally), steps in to do what she can. Played by Amy Adams, she's never quite credible as a baseball-obsessed tomboy. A believability-stretching road trip to North Carolina ensues, but there's really not all that much going on in Randy Brown's determinedly low-stakes screenplay. At least not much besides the pleasure of watching the lead performances. Trouble With the Curve doesn't just remind you what a wonderful screen presence Eastwood is; it makes you appreciate him even more as a director because Lorenz does such a crummy job. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Won't Back Down ★ Far be it from me to suggest an untoward agenda, but this steaming pile of phony uplift—funded by conservative Christian billionaire Phil Anschutz and released by right-wing overlord Rupert Murdoch—attempts to co-opt every scrappy underdog cliché in the inspirational playbook. Fashioning a feel-good family-friendly triumph of union busting and privatization, Won't Back Down softens up the controversial Parent Trigger laws that allow parents the authority to take over failing public schools. Maggie Gyllenhaal lamely tries to Erin Brockovich things up as a sassy Pittsburgh single mom, enlisting the help of Viola Davis' burnt-out classroom veteran to rescue these poor children from lazy, tenured teachers. Because the problem here isn't social inequity or class disadvantage. It's the unions, stupid. The inanity on display here is breathtaking. Won't Back Down presents a utopian fantasy where no child gets left behind, just so long as we finally free ourselves from the shackles of organized labor. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Words ★ Hilariously pretentious with almost nothing to say, this ponderous would-be epic from directors Brian Klugman and Lee Sternthal crafts three stories in a nesting-doll structure, each plot more ludicrous than the last. Bradley Cooper stars as a failed novelist who discovers a brilliant manuscript in a Hemingway-era satchel. Passing the book off as his own, he incurs the wrath of the original author, played by Jeremy Irons, who shows up here in some terrible old-age makeup and tries to singlehandedly make the picture amusing by sheer force of his scenery-chewing. The wannabe Philip Glass score and ostentatious camera movements suggest a bigger production, so the filmmakers add a badly miscast Dennis Quaid as a rough-and-tumble novelist spouting the picture's thesis statements. It's a movie about literature made by people who don't seem to like books very much. The Words grapples with antiquated notions of writers as Mailer-esque he-men, swaggering and screwing their way through a luxurious literary scene that doesn't actually exist anymore. This is a deeply stupid, silly picture. (In the suburbs.)

Heads Above Water

Staying Afloat

When it comes to the music biz, SoCal natives the Drowning Men are doing swimmingly. Opening for the likes of Flogging Molly and now headlining their own tour, band members Nato Bardeen, James Smith, Todd Eisenkerch, Rory Dolan and Gabe Messer have spent most of the last two years on the road, performing their new album, All of the Unknown. With a hybrid sound of early Leonard Cohen, City and Colour and the Weepies sans Deb Talan (and the weepiness), the Drowning Men's rootsy rock 'n' roll floats on pure and simple pleasures. Find your sea legs when the Drowning Men play at T.T. the Bear's on Oct. 26.

Rising in the East

The Great Divide Visual art meets the deep-rooted conflicts of Middle Eastern culture in Dor Guez's 100 Steps to the Mediterranean. The Jerusalem native shows three generations of his own family though film and photography, combining personal experience with the conflict between Israel and Palestine, East and West. The exhibition puts a face on the situation in the Middle East through video interviews and photographs of places throughout the Mediterranean. PERFECT CONDUCT

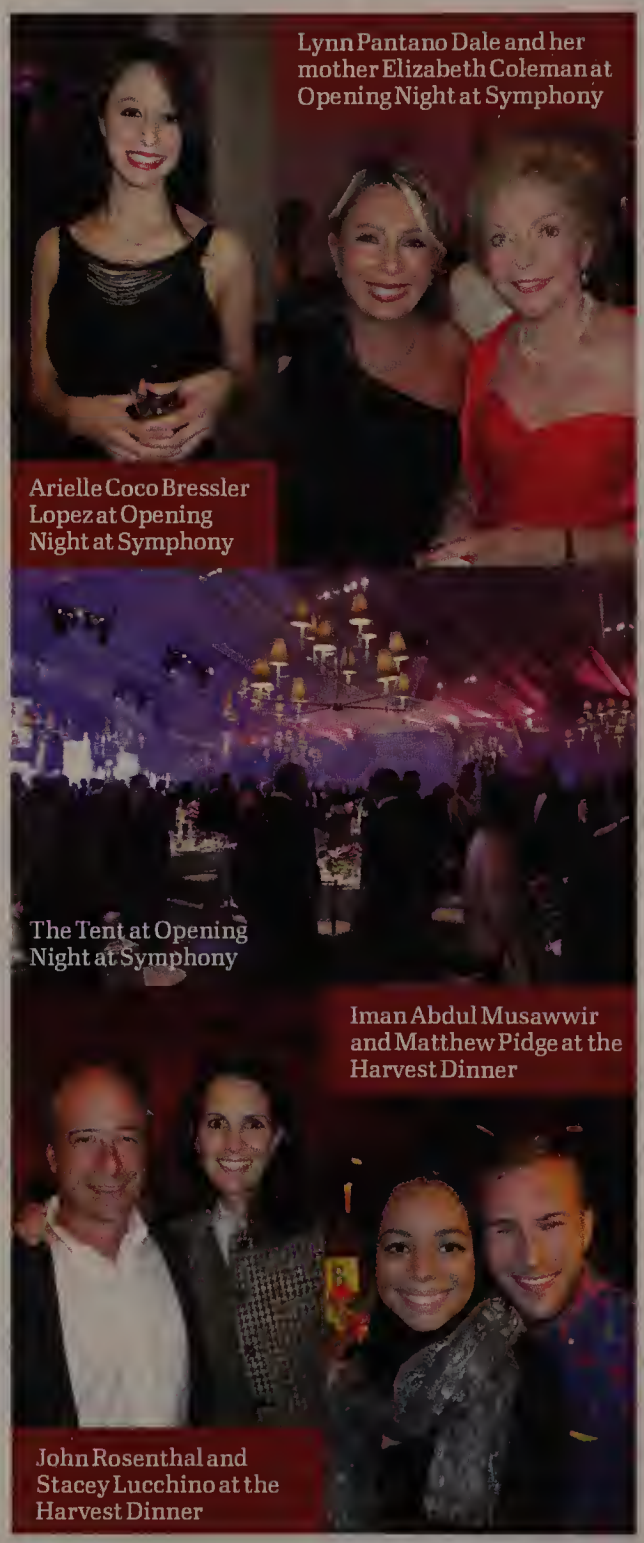
Don't Tell Mozart...



Pop Quiz: There's only one composer's name carved into the proscenium arch at Symphony Hall. Whose is it?

If you answered Beethoven, give yourself a gold star, and that's why the nothing-but-Ludwig-van program for Opening Night at Symphony was especially appropriate.

On hand for the concert that Itzhak Perlman both conducted AND played in, and the black-tie blowout that followed, was every Who from Who's Whoville, among them cochairs Steve and Roberta Weiner, investment deity Peter Lynch and the beautiful blonde Carolyn, food supply titan Karen Bressler and her handsome husband, Scott Epstein, Pill Hillions Coco and Kyra Montague, the ever affable Roger Servison, bright young things Jonathan and Amy Poorvu, top cat Jack Connors and the flawless Eileen, philanthroposaurus Rex David Mugar, über benefactors Ray and Maria Stata and Diddy and John Cullinane, MFA head honcho Malcolm Rogers, world-famous heart specialist Larry Cohn and the lovely Roberta, and one woman who had to extricate herself from a conversation during the cocktail hour because the man she was speaking to kept spitting bits of food on her gown.

After a performance that earned a thunderous standing ovation, dinner was served in a tent decorated to a fare-thee-well with orchids, dramatic lighting (including the chandeliers used at Chelsea Clinton's wedding) and a stage where musicians serenaded the guests during their meal. In short, it was quite the glitzy kickoff to the season.

Now for a fun tidbit: Why is Beethoven the only name carved into the proscenium arch, despite the fact that there are eight other medallions that were originally intended to have composer's names? The BSO's founders couldn't reach a consensus on who else deserved to be up there.

Beauty Secrets of the Rich and Famous...

Take the stunning scenery of the Boston Harbor Islands, add an organic farm and a few of Boston's best chefs, stir in a fabulous crowd, and you've got the recipe for the Harvest Dinner hosted by The Friends of Boston's Homeless.

A benefit for the Serving Ourselves Farm, which provides both food and food-related job training for the homeless clients of the Long Island Shelter, the evening began with drinks by the barn, where guests waved off the mosquitoes and were wowed by the sunset. After checking out the new chicken coop, everyone repaired to the beautifully decorated dining hall at Camp Harbor View, for an autumnal feast prepared by top chefs Tony Penezic, Dave Becker, Chris Douglass, Matthew Audette and Joanne Chang.

"I know it's a homeless shelter, but you could charge $1,200 a night for this view of the skyline."

Present and accounted for: fabulous do-gooder Iman Abdul Musawwir and her smokingly hot date, Matthew Pidge, the soignée Marie Keutmann with the dapper Richard Vignoni, rabble-rousing fashion icon Doris Yaffe, the beyond fabulous Mo Rosenthal and her handsome other half, John, Globe grand poobah Marty Baron, restaurateurs Garrett Harker and Patrick Lee, and one guest who said, "I know it's a homeless shelter, but you could charge $1,200 a night for this view of the skyline."

Overheard during the course of the evening:

"You look marvelous!"

"Thanks. It must be the combination of eating enough for a family of four and binge drinking nightly." ×××

The IMPROPER

Material World

There's an old joke about a Russian gangster who got into a car crash. Lurching around the wreckage, his lifeblood spurting from his gruesome injuries, all he could do was moan, "My Mercedes! My Mercedes!"

"Your Mercedes?" cried the EMT. "Buddy, you're missing your arm!"

Noticing the gory stump, the mafioso burst into fresh tears, bawling, "My Rolex! My Rolex!"

Adam DeTour

Of course, it's easy to scoff at what other people hold dear, especially if they cherish something patently shallow, materialistic and unaffordable at my level of income. It's so much simpler to nod wisely and wag a censorious finger over the trash can fire I'm fueling with my collection notices. But the mutilated gangster had a point. Neat stuff like a BMW M3 or Scampo's king crab with a glass of dry rosé are inarguable delights (see pages 48 and 42). They enflame the senses, tickle the limbic system and make us feel like labradors having their tummies rubbed. Sure, spa treatments may not give us spiritual jollies, but, unlike Deep Truths, they don't provoke anyone to plant shrapnel bombs, either. Material pleasures are a profound part of being human. That's the raison d'être of lifestyle magazines like this one, since, in a life bounded by budgets, every dollar needs to be weighed. Hence our handy guide to luxuries that can be experienced at any price point and Ezra's look at why it's asinine to own a cool car in Boston—but also on why it's intensely, shudderingly fun. Lydia Santangelo's fashions, too, take the high ground with glitzy nightlife styles.

LOOKS GOOD ON PAPER

GUYS AND DOLLS

RYAN NOVELLINE loves fashion, with all the trimmings. Having designed for Gap, Disney and Diane von Furstenberg, the Lexington native moonlights with a line of haute-couture paper dolls on Etsy. "A part of me escaped to Never Never Land many years ago, possibly during infancy, and now I long to reclaim it," he says. Depending on inspiration, Novelline, 22, draws about three to five outfits per week. One of his paper inventions is a scaled-down version of his full-size "Golden Book Gown," a princess-style dress constructed out of childhood reads. "The original piece was all about fantasy, play and passion," he says. "Just like the paper dolls." HANNAH SHEINBERG

HIGH CHIVE

There's nothing New York about Iggy's bagels, but their sandwiches may be a different story. Every morning, the bakery's factory store (hidden on the outskirts of Fresh Pond) splits a limited number of their chewy, crisp-crusted bagels, spreads them with Champlain Valley chive cream cheese and piles on a goodly amount of smoked Maine salmon, thinly sliced red onion, tomato and capers. The classic combo may be the closest you come to a Lower East Side deli in these parts—barring the bargain price tag. ELIZABETH BOMZE

EYELASH EXTENSIONS $145–$355, at Lash L'Amour, 129 Newbury St., Suite 201, Boston (617-247-1871); 55 Langley Road, Newton (617-916-1209) lashlamour.com

Beauty

Forty Winks

Beauty is in the eye of the beholder is a cliché of the past—today, it's on the eye. Eyelash extensions, done well, are nothing like the drag queen–esque press-on strips at the drugstore. And this is no lash-weave. Attached to your own lashes, one mink hair at a time, the extensions render mascara obsolete. It's that payoff that led Cynthia Tsang, owner of Lash L'Amour in Newton, to learn the extension craft seven years ago. "The eyes are important in making a positive impression," says Tsang. "Knowing that I'm able to help our clients improve their appearance and self-confidence is what drives my passion." Come mid-November, Tsang and her team bring the specialized service out of the 'burbs to Newbury, where the second Lash L'Amour location opens.

Tsang and her team offer three sets—natural, dramatic and luxurious. With a pair of long tweezers in each hand, the beautician grabs a single extension and dips it into a dark adhesive before using the other tweezers to isolate one lash on your lid. Once it's been singled out, she glues the superficial lash to the real one, as though welding wires. Repeat 70 or so times over the next hour and a half, and you've got yourself a set of bat-worthy lashes for a month or more, depending on care.

The result is elegant, but also habit-forming. "I don't want this to be a one-time thing," says Tsang. "And if it is, I'm going to give [the client] the best experience." A warning on that experience: It'll make you feel like flirting. HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

SORELLINA SISTERHOOD

And Emmons eyes the future.

MARGA RAFFUCCI didn't take the traditional route to her new position as executive chef at Sorellina. True, she was hired four years ago as a line cook, promoted to junior sous chef, then sous chef, then executive sous chef last year. But Rafucci began her working life with a B.A. in comparative literature, followed by an outlook-changing decision to attend law school in her native Puerto Rico.

"I couldn't bear the thought of being a lawyer the rest of my life," she recalls. "I can't see myself doing anything but cooking." So Raffucci returned to school for a different degree—this time from the Culinary Institute of America—and started to gain experience in restaurants like the former Aujourd'hui in the Four Seasons Hotel.

Her mission, she says, isn't to undertake a major overhaul of Sorellina's menu. Rather, Raffucci will continue to revamp the menu seasonally, and will change one or two dishes a week, leaving "classics" like veal Milanese untouched. Her signature dish is braised wild boar fazzoletti—a handkerchief-shaped pasta—accented with Champagne grapes.

Working with a female executive pastry chef and three female line cooks makes for a distinct kitchen dynamic. According to Raffucci, it's "calm, in the sense that everyone is very hardworking, and there's not a lot of drama."

TRAY CHIC: CHEF DIDI EMMONS—founder of local favorites like the Delux and Haley House Bakery Café—tells us she's "knee-deep in compiling a cookbook of school food for the state of Massachusetts." Aiming to be "The Joy of Cooking for Food Service Directors," the as-yet-untitled project is slated to be published online in September 2013.

FOGO DE CHÃO
200 Dartmouth St., Boston
(617-565-6300) fogo.com

GET YOUR GAUCHO

There are no menus, no pictures of food to preview before ordering. In fact, there's no ordering at all. At Fogo de Chão, which opens in Back Bay on Nov. 2, wandering gauchos carry your dinner tableside on metal sticks (fans of Cambridge's Midwest Grill take note). "You eat as long as you want, how much you can," says head gaucho chef and general manager Leandro Benacchio. "It's continuous service."

Though the premise might sound American—all-you-can-eat, meat, meat, meat!—it's a wholly Brazilian tradition, dating back centuries to when grill masters cooked over an open flame. Reflecting this history is the restaurant's name, which means "fire on the ground." The process and preparation aims to simply coax out the protein's natural flavors. There are 16 cuts in all—including filet mignon (with a bacon-wrapped variation), pork loin and sausage, young leg of lamb, chicken, prime rib-eye and sirloin. Dishes are preceded by grilled mozzarella and accompanied by polenta, garlic mashed potatoes, caramelized bananas and warm pão de queijo, or cheese bread.

Preparing the fare in the back of the house, chefs butcher, salt and marinate the meats before skewering and roasting them over an open flame. The gauchos then take the skewers to the dining room to serve anyone who has signaled they're ready for more. That signal? A small card that resembles a poker chip, green on one side, red on the other, that guests flip to indicate whether they'd like to be offered whatever cut is circulating. The chefs don't call it quits until you do. It's like a game of chicken, but played with your stomach, and actual chickens.

Although Fogo de Chão, with 27 restaurants worldwide, has built its reputation on meat, vegetarians won't go hungry. At the center of the dining room, with seating for 300-plus, including six private dining areas, is a hot and cold salad bar, stocked with imported cheeses, fresh asparagus, beets and other vegetables, potato and pasta salads and more. Wash everything down with one of 12 caipirinhas, a traditional regional cocktail made with lime, sugar and Brazilian rum, or one of 3,000 bottles of wine on display in the glass-encased wine cellar. Then admit defeat, turning your chip to red and sighing, "Não mais, por favor." HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

HURLEY-BURLY

Seinfeld alum John O'Hurley costars with Christie Brinkley in _Chicago_ at the Citi Performing Arts Center Wang Theatre, Nov. 1–4.

You've been playing Billy Flynn in Chicago since 2005. What keeps you coming back?
He's one of the best-crafted leading man roles in American musical theater. I contrast him with the other character that I play, which is King Arthur in Spamalot. So I have those two arrows in my quiver. But I like Billy Flynn the best because he's as complicated as he is charming and funny.

How's working with Christie Brinkley?
She is, truly, one of the most beautiful women alive. I think she is the personification of what Roxie is—that sense of this wonderful coquette that wants so badly to be famous. She just plays this character perfectly. Bless her heart, she hasn't had the training that many people have, but that doesn't mean she doesn't have the courage about being up there and doing with what she has. And I think that's fabulous. I further underscore that by the fact that I couldn't get a date to the senior prom when I was in high school, and now I have Christie Brinkley on my lap.

Is Billy Flynn anything like J. Peterman?
Not at all. Billy Flynn is a very knowing type of character. He's as eloquent as he is dangerous. J. Peterman was never dangerous. I compare him to Mr. Magoo—no matter what happened, he always came out on top. Life was an adventure, even a trip to the latrine.

What's you favorite J. Peterman moment?
When Rob Schneider was playing my assistant. I thought that he and Elaine were having a little tête-à-tête on office time, so I was trying to encourage it by dropping off two tickets to the circus. This is the monologue that they had cut: "Elaine, don't worry. I, too, am no stranger to love on the clock. My father apprenticed me to a honey factory in Belize. The chief beekeeper was this horrible hag of a woman, with gnarled teeth and a giant wart that she called a nose. She was not attractive, even by backwoods standards. But love is truly blind, Elaine, and as the days went on, working closer and closer together, that sweet smell of honey in the air, I knew I had to have that horrible creature. And I did. So you and Bob have a good time tonight." HANNAH SHEINBERG

Refined Tastes

Sometimes wines get pigeonholed into specific roles. Champagne, for example, has a reputation as a wine just for celebrations. Vinho verde is a wine many treat solely as a summertime thirst-quencher. Its low alcohol and refreshing spritz of CO_2 suit this purpose, but there's a synergy between this bone-dry, lively white and seafood that continues year-round. The following three are outstanding examples, and each costs $10 or less.

Quinta da Azevedo Vinho Verde 2011 ($9, WINESTONE) When the word "Quinta" appears on a Portuguese label, it denotes that the grapes are grown at a single property, and that the wine is estate-bottled. Quinta bottles represent a tiny fraction of the region's production, but they are generally among the best wines. With a bracing acidity, this one has a floral, lime-like flavor. Its minerality makes the Azevedo a great choice with any mildly sauced fish, or with fried clams.

Quinta da Aveleda Vinho Verde 2011 ($10, MARTY'S LIQUORS) Aveleda is the region's largest producer, and this Quinta wine is from the fifth generation Guedes family's showcase property. Featuring more body and roundness than the average vinho verde, with pear-like, honeyed flavors, it's an ideal aperitif, or a wonderfully vibrant match to spicy fish dishes.

Broadbent Vinho Verde NV ($10, THE WINE EMPORIUM) This is a bright, refreshing, explosively crisp wine with tart apple and lemon notes. Only 9 percent alcohol, this blend of loureiro, trajadura and pedernã is a natural for ceviche, sushi or raw shellfish. It's also great with smoked fish. Very pale, almost silvery in color, it's a yeast-accented wine that should be consumed quite chilled for maximum enjoyment.

TO THE APARTMENT DIRECTLY ABOVE MINE: Would it be possible to not throw parties featuring the greatest radio hits of 2002 every Wednesday at 3 am? Sometimes I, as well as other tenants, enjoy a full night of sleep. Furthermore, your constant "furniture moving" at all hours of the day and night, which tends to shake my entire apartment like an earthquake, is quite unpleasant. Please either stop practicing the art of feng shui or soundproof your apartment.

To the strangers who say "hi" to my dog: He can't say hi back. He's a dog. He doesn't have the physical capabilities to utter a hello. He doesn't even have thumbs. If you want to pet him that's more than fine. Or tell me how adorable he is. That's A-OK, too. But please, stop saying hi. He's not going to say it back.

Dog owners everywhere

To the late-night jammers: Last-call was already over, yet the three of you sat on a bench off of Harvard Ave., guitars and bongo in hand. To the NHL: We're all skating on thin ice. Without any games this season, I'm unsure how I'll survive the dark, dreary days to come. A lockout means a winter without hockey, and a winter without hockey is like a tequila shot without a lime or a wedding without an open bar. Unbearable. Please, I beg of you, come to an agreement before the snow takes over the city streets. My survival depends on it.

Drink of the Moment

NAME: Beantown Car

PRICE: $13

INGREDIENTS: Hennessey VSOP, Licor 43, lemon and lime juice, egg white. And a brown sugar rim.

INSPIRATION: It's a riff on the sidecar that borrows texture notes from the pisco sour. Says bartender Nancy Fedoce, "Cognacs and brandies are finding their way back into the mainstream. For fall trends, they work perfectly."

FLAVOR: The initial taste is surprisingly creamy and sweet, with sour notes lightening the Cognac to such a degree that it survives mostly in caramel tones. Vanilla from the Licor 43 further dampens any residual burn, and egg white steers the drink into the shadow of the dessert list. It's like sipping candied velvet.

USE IT TO: Melt away the autumnal chill; as a seasonal alternative to the Ramos gin fizz.

PAIR IT WITH: Vanilla-bean panna cotta.

WHY LICOR 43?: "The classics always seem to do well," says Fedoce. "Creating a cocktail utilizing older, sometimes lost or left-behind ingredients such as Licor 43 and making them new again is the perfect way to bring them back."

A RUM THING

Lehane's latest is a mix of bootlegging, love and violence.

PAGE ONE OF DENNIS Lehane's latest novel, jam-packed with Prohibition-era violence and treachery, has Joe Coughlin's feet in cement. There's robbery, bootlegging and unwise love affairs, while Boston, full of dark flavor, seethes through the scenes. Lehane's characters are tough-talking, heartless thugs, and the murders they commit are almost grittily casual. Alligators could be their brothers.

The son of a cop, Joe ends up in Charlestown Penitentiary, one door down from hell. After jail, Joe is recruited to be a rum lord in Florida, where, in racially charged terrain, he hooks up with sexy Cuban Graciela—a woman of flowing skirts and good values. Joe remains a gangster, though, robbing a huge naval transport, and shows he's no stranger to killing. But with Graciela, who does charitable work for fellow Cubans, Joe's more positive, nuanced side comes out, and he soon finds himself up against the Ku Klux Klan.

Live by Night
by Dennis Lehane

Lehane is from Boston.

Together, the unlikely couple becomes successful and rich. But loyalty in Crimeland flips like an omelet, and a criminal mentor wants Joe out of the business. Lehane's narrative zooms like a terrifying roller coaster, sometimes stopping to smell the roses of redemption. ✖✖✖

QUOTE PAGE 71: "I can get whores anywhere. Got a pretty new one waiting for me as soon as I'm done with you." He studied his hands for a moment. "But you shot up a small town and stole 60 thousand dollars without my permission and left three cops dead. That brings a shit-brown rain down on all of us. Because now every cop in New England thinks Boston gangsters are mad dogs to be put down like mad dogs."

GET IT TOGETHER

A vacation home with hotel services combines the best of both worlds.

COTTAGE INDUSTRY Who needs a hotel when you've got concierge service?

NO ONE WANTS THE stress of planning a vacation when he or she is on vacation. When big groups get together, however, someone invariably ends up in the thankless role of administrative assistant, researching and organizing rentals, meals and activities in an unfamiliar setting. If you're thinking about a large reunion on the Cape, you can skip the hassle by going through a realty group and concierge service. Realtors John C. Ricotta & Associates have partnered with local businesses to provide a five-star, private escape in Chatham.

If your group numbers 10 or less, ask for 201 Main St., across the street from the beach and steps to the lighthouse. It might look like a modest cottage from the outside, but the four-bedroom Cape Codder boasts spacious rooms, custom cabinetry, top-of-the-line appliances, a hot tub and a small gym. Weekly rates aren't cheap, even in the low season, but it's less per person than a stay at the nearby swanky Chatham Bars Inn. And you won't have to worry about noise complaints from hotel guests, since your whole party can let loose in the basement, which is outfitted with a full-sized bar area that comes with hookups for a keg, a 100-inch projection TV and a pool table.

The downside to renting a house in the Cape, even a luxury one, is that linens and towels aren't typically included. You can rent high-end sheets and Turkish towels (as well as cribs and other baby gear) through Essential Rentals Inc., but if you don't want to spend your vacation making beds and cleaning up after your guests, Ricotta will set you up with their concierge, Holly Abbate. Before your arrival, she'll stock your Sub-Zero fridge with provisions (just send her a list the day before), make your beds, provide you with a goody bag of eco-friendly household products you might need during your stay and greet you with fresh flowers from New England Gardens of South Harwich. Her eye for detail includes toilet-paper rosettes in the bathroom. She'll even arrange daily maid service, just like in a hotel. Like any good concierge, she'll also suggest ideas for your stay, like at-home clambakes where a driver will drop off a fully cooked meal and pick up all the equipment the next day.

Indeed, to maximize your downtime, leave the cooking to professionals. Tony Tocantins, chef/owner of Toucan Cater, will come to your home and prepare a four-course tasting menu with wine, which might include enormous diver scallops with a rosemary-thyme beurre blanc, soft shell crab over salad greens, lamb chops and chocolate mousse with raspberry whipped cream and a Champagne truffle. He'll even leave you some of his outstanding French dressing to take home as a souvenir. Like Abbate, Tocantins is hooked up to the network of local purveyors, so he can cherry-pick produce, wines and meats at the best prices.

You can reward yourself for all this clever outsourcing by treating yourself to an in-home massage of the same quality as at a hotel spa. Masseuse Jenelle Kutinsky tailors your time on her table to your problem areas, knowledgeably zeroing in on tension. Although that may not be a problem anymore. When you eliminate the groceries, the chores and hassle inherent in family vacations, you may find yourself spoiled for future trips. The only drawback is you'll have to find something else to bicker about. ✖✖✖

There's brilliant Thai food in Brighton.

433 Faneuil St., Brighton
(617-254-2025)
thainorthbrighton.com

THAI-ED AND TRUE Try anything with pork from the chalkboard menu, including the pork salad, at Thai North.

WHY IS THE BEST Thai restaurant in the area consistently empty on Friday nights? Why are cookie-cutter places serving New American fare still teeming with crowds? Examining the situation, a cynic might explain that the local food scene is about celebrity, location, design, buzzwords like farm-to-table, anything but the actual food. An optimist, and I'm one of them, sees this 16-seat hole-in-the-wall in Oak Square as a chance to prove that structured, thoughtfully prepared dishes will win out, and that Bostonians aren't segregating ethnic cuisine from the category of first-rate food.

On first glance, Thai North's stellar culinary chops aren't obvious. The restaurant has been around for a year and a half, but most of its business comes from delivery and takeout orders; its customers linger only long enough to pick up their pad Thai or chicken satay. Neither of these ubiquitous Thai staples reflects the creativity of the restaurant's better dishes, but they provide interesting twists on the usual. (The satay, for example, provided a generous portion of dark meat with spicy chili-peanut and sweet-vinegar dipping sauces.)

There's little logic to the menu. Some Vietnamese dishes appear scattered throughout; the listed house specials neither correspond to the pictures on the wall nor to the changing 17-item chalkboard menu of northern Thai specialties propped in the rear; and the friendly waitress is easily frazzled when more than two tables are filled. But order from the chalkboard or the photos, and you'll be rewarded with spicy dishes from Thailand's Chiang Mai and Chiang Rai regions that you won't find anywhere else in Boston.

You won't go wrong ordering anything with pork. The tomato ground pork ($9.50) was a gorgeous fish-sauce-and-cilantro-infused dip served with purple-and-white sticky rice and a platter of steamed green beans, broccoli florets, cabbage and sliced carrots to counter the chili kick. Pork rinds and raw cucumbers provided crunch. Chiang Mai sausage ($10) was brimming with finely chopped lemongrass and chilies, and held a citrusy, smoky flavor. The wonderful pork salad ($11.25) understated its meatiness, as crackling, shredded pork and offal bits combined with the fiery fish sauce for an intense larb.

The non-pork dishes proved more inconsistent. The duck salad ($13.50) lacked the textural contrast of the pork version, and the poultry could've passed for any meat. The Chiang Mai noodle curry ($8.25), initially a revelation that had me mentally scribing a five-star review on my first visit, was a disappointment thereafter. On that initial try, the pungent broth had notes of oil-fried spices—yellow curry, bay leaf, galangal, ginger and mace, among others—and an infusion of rich chicken stock that tasted as if it had been simmering for days. On a subsequent visit, the dish was still delicious, but the broth was a watery relation to its full-bodied predecessor. The Northern herb fish ($10.50) was a banana-leaf–wrapped chili bomb, the steamed white fillet exploding with mortar-and-pestled spices, and sticky rice served in straw cylinders provided an outstanding accompaniment.

Although it doesn't have a liquor license, Thai North will deliver its chalkboard offerings within a three-mile radius for those who don't want to trek to the Brighton-Brookline border. This still means an investment of a visit, because the specialties aren't listed on its website or through third-party sites that handle delivery. The disparity in the demand for these dishes—where Thai North's uniqueness and excellence shines—versus the demand for more generic pan-Asian items reflects a challenge for so-called ethnic cuisine. With any luck, an influx of customers will encourage the specials to take center stage instead of being relegated, as they are now, to the back of the room. ×××

Movies { SEAN BURNS }

NOSEDIVE

Denzel Washington stars as an addict pilot in a film that crashes and burns.

Flight ★★☆☆

Starring Denzel Washington, John Goodman, Bruce Greenwood, Don Cheadle, Melissa Leo and Kelly Reilly. Written by John Gatins. Directed by Robert Zemeckis. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THE TROUBLE WITH MOVIES about addiction is that they all tend to be the same. There are only so many ways to run through the standard parabola of denial, rock-bottom, relapse and recovery before it starts to feel like déjà vu all over again. Of course, these pictures keep getting made—they're catnip for actors, particularly during awards season. They're also classy ways for filmmakers to wallow in depravity before the inevitable third act sanctimony kicks in, and then everybody in Hollywood politely applauds while throwing around words like "courageous." The best movies featuring addiction (Oslo, August 31st or The Master are excellent recent examples) are about the characters and not the Problem. Flight is about the Problem.

Denzel Washington stars as Whip Whitaker (any alliterative resemblance to Sully Sullenburger is presumably intended), a hotshot pilot for a regional Georgia airline. He's first seen in a hungover stupor, profanely arguing on the phone with his ex-wife between swigs from one of the previous night's half-finished beers, while a naked flight attendant cavorts around the nondescript airport hotel room. Whitaker cuts them both a couple lines of blow, and then it's time to go to work.

Yes, it's shocking. We're not used to seeing movie stars like Denzel snorting rails, and there's more debauchery in these first five minutes of Flight than in the entire 35-year career of director Robert Zemeckis, a family-friendly technical whiz who peaked with Back to the Future and Who Framed Roger Rabbit before collecting a shelf full of Oscars because people thought Forrest Gump was profound. This casual squalor is indie-movie territory, and it instantly clangs against the bright colors and square compositions of Zemeckis' slick Hollywood gloss.

Whitaker soon takes to the skies, surreptitiously pouring himself a screwdriver and even catching a quick nap in the cockpit before a fluke mechanical failure sends his aircraft spiraling into a dive. Zemeckis' Cast Away set the gold standard for harrowing plane crashes, and Flight's white-knuckle, supremely harrowing opening set piece seems designed to top it. With the kind of superhuman confidence one tends to find in loaded cokeheads, Captain Whitaker inverts the plane and miraculously prevents the airliner from crashing. He's a national hero, the greatest pilot anyone has ever seen.

Only catch is that he was smashed.

The more interesting aspects of Flight are in the procedural cover-up that follows, aided by Bruce Greenwood's honey-voiced union rep and Don Cheadle's persnickety attorney. The less interesting parts—which unfortunately comprise the majority of this picture's bloated 139-minute running time—strand Whitaker at his father's farmhouse, attempting to kick booze and drugs before a federal hearing that may land him in prison. He climbs on the wagon; he falls off the wagon. He climbs on the wagon again and then guess what happens next? Rinse, wash, repeat.

The monotony becomes numbing, and I suppose it's something of a backhanded compliment to say that Washington may be a bit too good at playing an emotionally stunted, self-pitying drunk clinging desperately to denial. A sketchily drawn courtship with Kelly Reilly's winsome heroin addict doesn't allow the character to open up very much, and he spends most of the picture locked away from the audience. He's an aloof figure who self-destructs over and over again until it's eventually time for everybody to recite "The Serenity Prayer," so the movie can finally end.

Screenwriter John Gatins penned that recent robot-boxing abomination Real Steel, and Flight won't seem like much of a departure if you stop to notice how strictly both movies adhere to rigid formulas. Though wildly diverse in concept and subject matter, neither film contains a moment you didn't predict 20 minutes in advance.

After the initial crash, even Zemeckis seems to lose interest. Flight contains this restless innovator's stodgiest camerawork. Visually it's a lot of antiseptic sets and empty hangars with the proceedings jostled along by laughably obvious classic-rock music cues and an ersatz digital-video sheen. The movie briefly comes to life during two impeccably timed laugh-track visits from John Goodman as a motormouthed coke dealer, acting as if he's wandered in from The Big Lebowski and temporarily shaking off the air of over-determined glumness.

But the question lingers: Would Whip Whitaker have had the cojones to attempt such a nutso, lifesaving maneuver if he hadn't been loaded? A late-game fake-out almost makes an argument for enablers, but Flight discreetly backs away from such provocations, settling instead for easy homilies and three extra endings to remind us it's once again time to politely applaud while throwing around words like "courageous." ✖✖✖

Best of Belgium

Belgium is renowned for its vibrant and diverse beer culture. A rich tradition of culinary invention and improvisation, combined with centuries of brewing passion and expertise, helped craft a stunning variety of beer styles enjoyed around the world.

Leffe Blonde was first brewed in 1240 by the monks of Abbaye de Notre Dame de Leffe in Belgium. A spicy, faintly clove-like aroma is balanced by Leffe's creamy body and restrained dry finish.

Stella Artois' rich brewing heritage dates back to 1366 in Leuven, Belgium, where it was first brewed to celebrate the holiday season. Traditional malted barley and the highest quality European hops give Stella Artois its full flavor and delicately crisp finish.

Hoegaarden is the Original Belgian Wheat Beer, dating back to the 15th Century. A naturally cloudy beer, Hoegaarden features a secret to its refreshing flavor and spicy nose: real Curaçao orange peel and a dash of coriander.

Always Enjoy Responsibly.

AROUSED AGAIN

Boston's theatrical band triggers a rare reunion.

Human Sexual Response plays House of Blues on Nov. 10.

FROM RISQUÉ LYRICS TO charismatic shows and wild costumes, Human Sexual Response embodied its provocative name from the moment the group emerged on Boston's New Wave scene in the late '70s.

The city vice squad crashed one gig on a porno false-alarm after a flyer advertised the concert would feature "films." Then there was the time the band sang a friskily lewd song on the after-hours TV program Five All Night. DJ host Matt Siegel danced with the live audience and producers flipped out. "The whole course of the evening was how outrageous this new music scene was," lead singer Larry Bangor says. "So we figured we'd do something outrageous."

The part-straight/part-gay sextet was best known for two novelty numbers, the racy "What Does Sex Mean to Me?" and the hit "Jackie Onassis," with its couplet, "I want to be Jackie Onassis, I want to wear a pair of dark sunglasses."

"Any art that pushes controversial boundaries always gets in a little quicker and easier if you have a dollop of humor," guitarist Rich Gilbert says.

> "With seven strong, distinctive personalities, you sometimes had to bring in a negotiator."

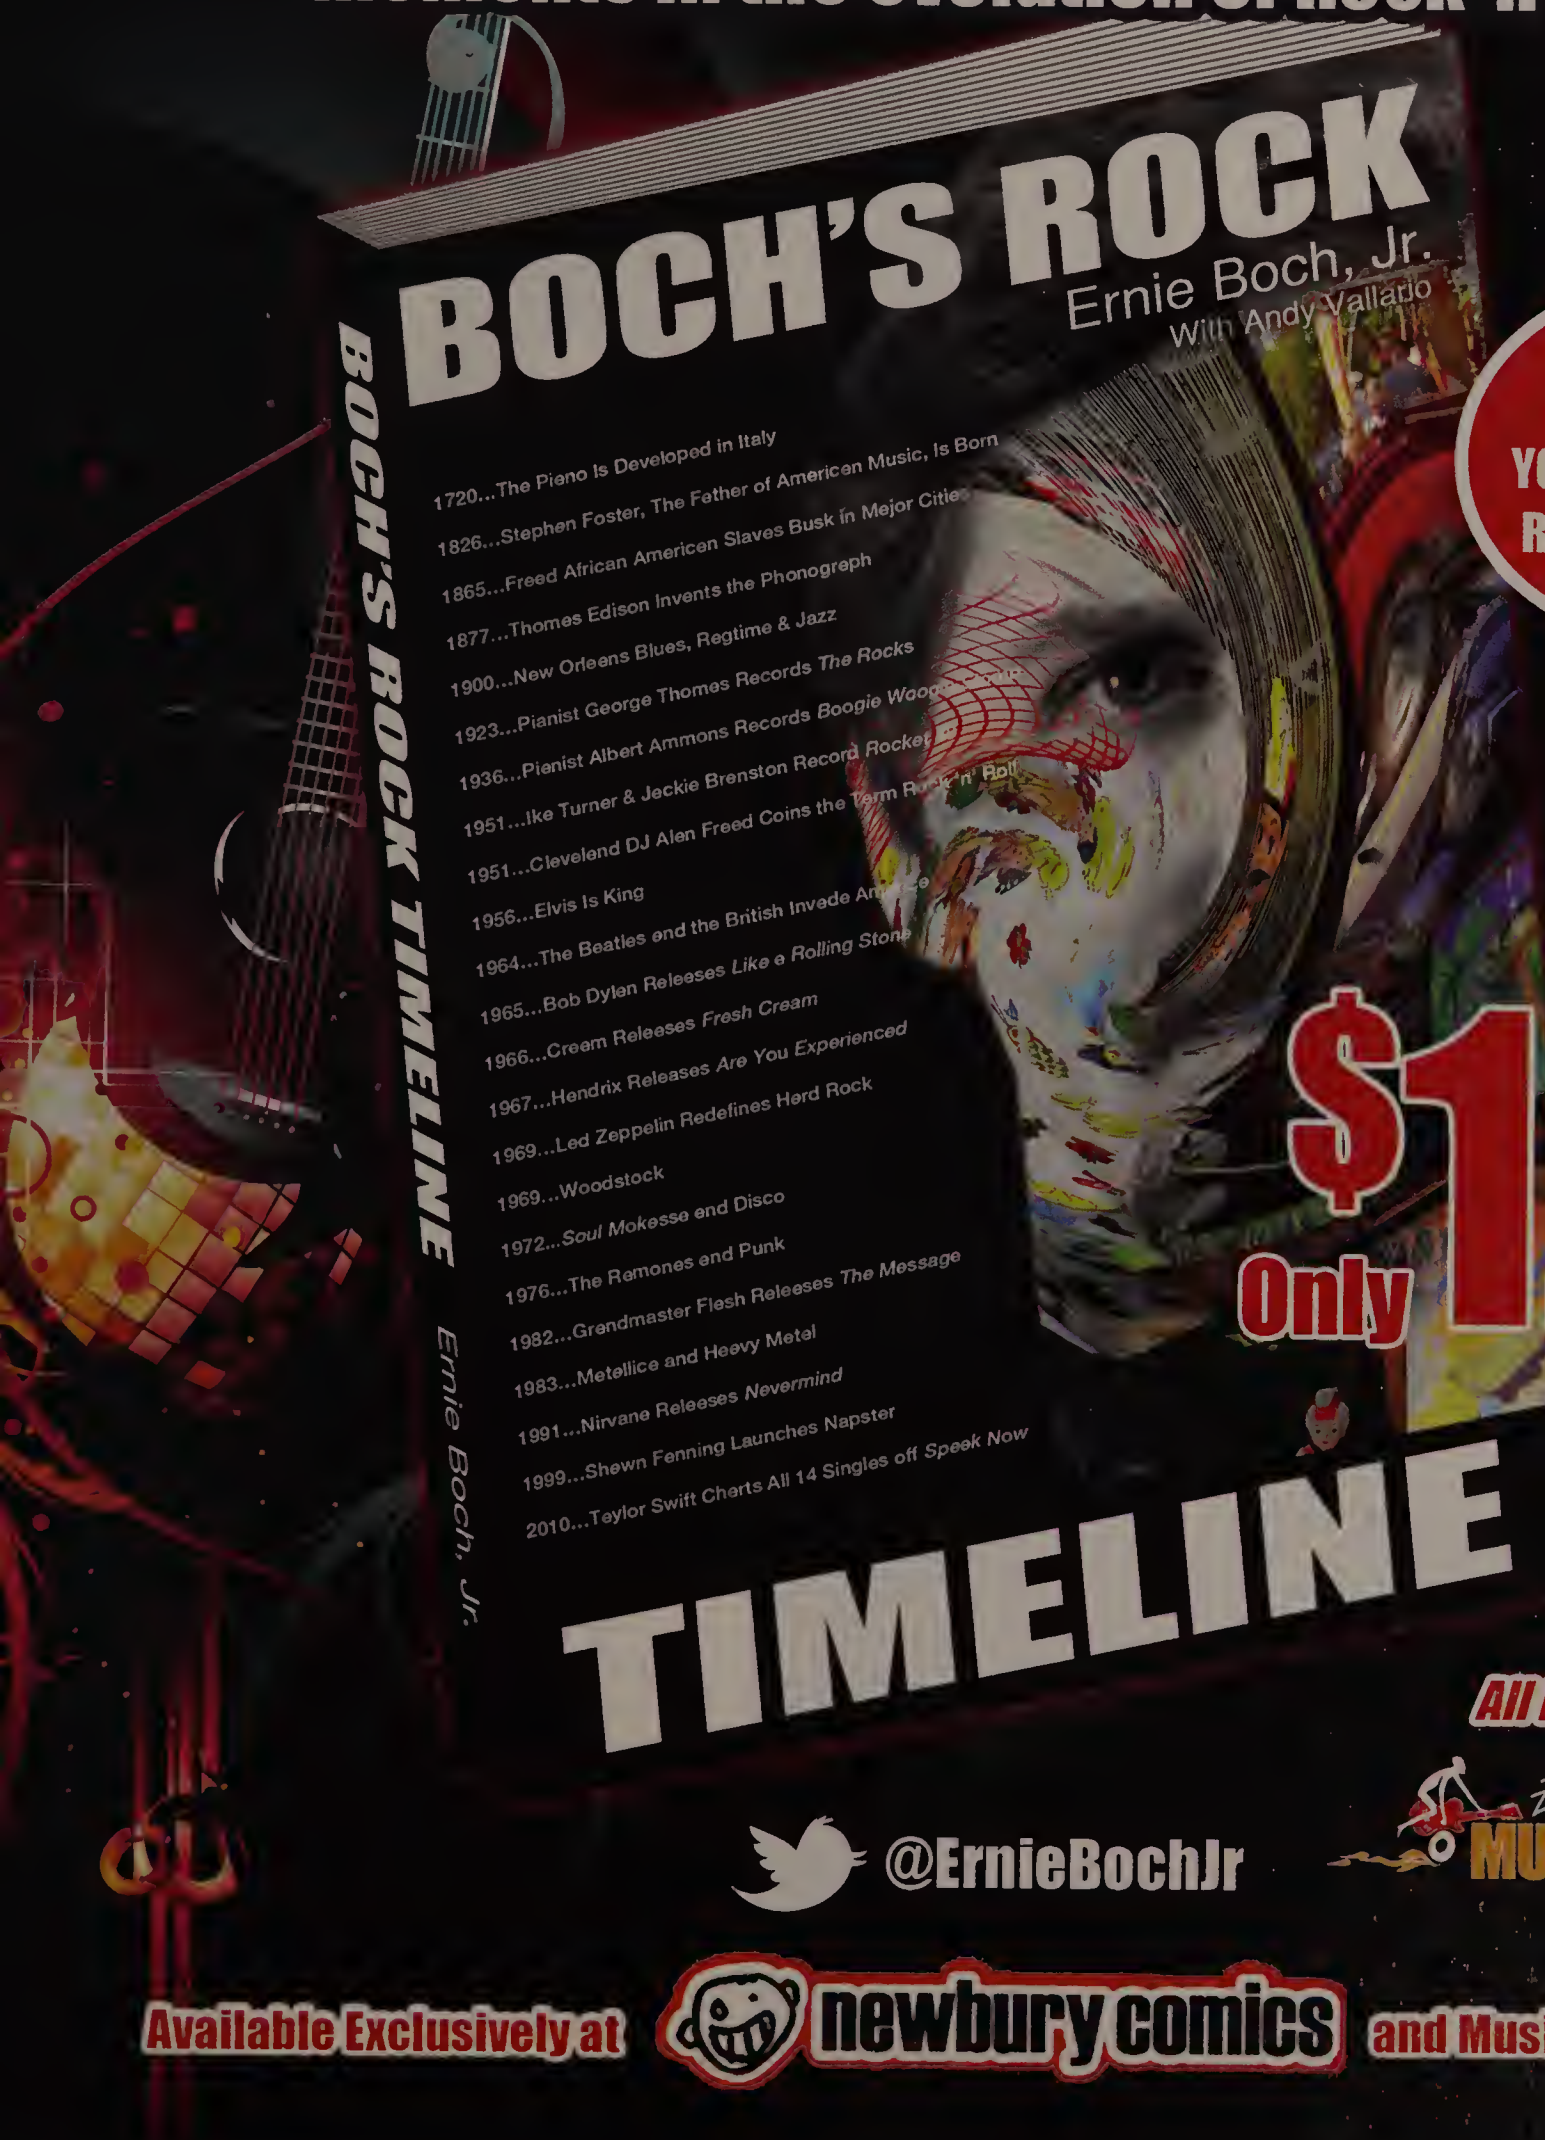
Beyond button-pushing ditties, Human Sexual Response also wrote songs that sounded spooky and serious, such as "Anne Frank Story" and "Land of the Glass Pinecones." The group killed onstage behind its novel front line of four singers who shimmied in spastic coordination.

Bangor and his brother, Dini Lamot (they used pseudonyms), first connected with Casey Cameron and Windle Davis to form an a cappella group and sing at parties. After a country phase as Honey Bea and the Meadow Muffins, the singers posted an ad seeking rock musicians. Seeing the ad and its catalog of influences, including the Jackson 5 and MC5 listed together, Gilbert knew he had to audition.

"Within the first minute, I knew there was something unique and special going on," the Berklee dropout says. "They didn't look or sound like anybody else. Their four distinctive personalities were completely on display but also the unity, the chemistry."

With Gilbert, drummer Malcolm Travis and bassist Chris Maclachlan (who replaced Rolf Anderson before the band recorded its two albums), Human Sexual Response secured a deft balance. In Gilbert, the band found a sonic architect who merged his love for punk with textural diversity that nodded to his guitar hero, Steve Howe of Yes. "I was very conscious of composing and arranging guitar parts that worked in the structure," says Gilbert.

The group played its first gig in 1977 at the Birdcage, a Combat Zone strip club that began booking rock. "Some bikers got into a fight with pool cues," Bangor says. "It was weird to be standing on basically a stripper's stage, and people were beating each other."



Over the next five years, the Humans found a more compatible audience in Boston and beyond. "We had an odd lineup, so that probably helped," Bangor says. "But it's mainly because we had good songs and we were fun onstage." The band even played in occasional matching costumes, from nurse dresses to black body paint and pink hair. For a 1984 Halloween reunion, band members arrived in skeleton outfits, and go-go dancers crawled up web-like nets.

Human Sexual Response had broken up two years earlier. "With seven very strong, distinctive personalities, even deciding where to eat dinner, you sometimes had to bring in a negotiator," Gilbert says. But to stage a few reunion shows through the '80s, Bangor adds, "We never really had to twist arms."

Nonetheless, a Nov. 10 date at House of Blues marks the group's first Boston performance in nearly 25 years, celebrating a long-delayed DVD from a 1982 show. Bringing in members from around the country, the Humans warm up on Nov. 7 at a club in New York, where they reunited in 2008 for a test drive. "I'm confident," Bangor says. "When we did this show four years ago, it took two songs before we were pretty much there, and we sound better than we used to." ×××

AW, SHOOT

Special Forces training is a blast.

I'M GENERALLY INTERESTED in people who have crazy jobs, and the job description for U.S. Special Forces soldiers is pretty ballsy. I have a college friend who tried out for a branch of the Special Forces, an endeavor that I learned about when the Army called me as part of his background check. I valiantly resisted the urge to say things like, "I don't know who Marx and Lenin are, but they must be great friends of his, the way he talks about them."

As I recall, my friend flunked out of the program when it transpired that he couldn't hold his breath for five minutes. I don't think the test involved mere lung capacity—you had to hold your breath for five minutes, then jump out of the pool and beat the crap out of a ninja. I might be exaggerating. But not by much.

Until recently, that tangential experience was the sum of my knowledge of the Special Forces. But I've just returned from a visit to a Green Beret training compound with a fresh appreciation of my uselessness to America. As you may know, Green Berets are characterized by a high level of specialized training, extreme physical endurance and a lingering resentment that, in 2001, the Army decided to give everyone berets.

The Army is way more confident about my weapons-handling ability than I am.

First, we're ushered into what looks like a large garage, where we watch a recruitment video called Trained for Victory. It looks like a trailer for a Michael Bay movie, and makes me want to carry a walkie-talkie and give hand signals while looking through night-vision binoculars. If I could do all that without anyone shooting at me, I might join the Army. But I looked at the website, and I can't seem to find a "nobody shoots at you" program.

We then head over to a house that's a precise replica of the type of place a Special Forces team would have to storm in Afghanistan. The architecture is what you might call "mud-hut chic," designed to mimic a place that would be owned by a successful, malevolent Afghan financier—the kind of guy who could afford a house that includes a secret bomb-making room.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

After my exposure to this episode of House Hunters: Kabul, let me just say that we should all be very glad that we're not successful Afghan financiers. Because the place is a dump.

Sure, there's a hookah lounge that looks kind of chill, but there are also pigs and chickens living in the next room. The chickens are fake, but our Army chaperone informs us that they usually have a live pig in the house. "It's been raining lately, though, and the roof leaks, so we took him out of here," he says. "Maybe we should've left him, though, because then it would smell more realistic." I imagine the pig waiting in his dressing room, asking, "OK, what's my motivation?"

Our Green Beret guide ushers us into the bathroom and gestures toward the toilet, which is one of those Eastern models that's basically a ceramic hole in the floor. "Where does nobody want to search?" he asks. "Under the toilet." He then pulls back the rug, lifts up the toilet and reveals a trap door leading to a huge basement. "See, they know we don't want to search there, so they're hiding things under outhouses and places like that. This sort of place is where we found Saddam Hussein."

After this most bizarre open-house tour ever—I'm sorry, I don't think we're going to put in an offer—we step into an adjacent building that houses the video firing range. In simple terms, this experience is like a first-person video game, with the screen projected on a foam wall in front of you. But instead of an Xbox controller, you use real guns, one of which is presently handed to me. It turns out that the Army is way more confident of my weapons-handling ability than I am.

"You ever shoot a Glock?" asks a cheerful Green Beret. I act like I have to think about it—man, I've shot so many guns, maybe some of them were Glocks? But let's have a quick refresher just in case. He shows me how the safety works, and a moment later I'm unloading 9mm slugs into a target scrolling across the wall. When I've hit it 10 times, the screen changes to buttons reading "next" and "reset." To click on the buttons, you shoot them. That's right: these guys use live ammo to navigate computer menus. Facebook update: Blam blam blam blam blam!

You might wonder what the Special Forces are going to do once the war in Afghanistan winds down in 2014. To answer that question, I'll just say that Afghanistan isn't the only country featured in the Army's Epcot Center of hellholes. I don't want to give anything away, but I'd keep my nose clean, Canada. ×××

Soroff On MINDY KALING

The star of The Mindy Project tells us about stereotypes and being a smart girl in Hollywood.

WRITER/ACTRESS MINDY KALING, 33, WAS BORN VERA Chokalingam in Cambridge. Best known as Kelly Kapoor on The Office, she is the creator and star of the new Fox comedy series The Mindy Project, on which she plays an ob-gyn. In 2003, she portrayed Ben Affleck in a play she cowrote, Matt & Ben, which Time dubbed one of the "top 10 theatrical events of the year." On the big screen, she has appeared in The 40-Year-Old Virgin, Unaccompanied Minors, License to Wed and Night at the Museum: Battle of the Smithsonian. Her book, Is Everyone Hanging Out Without Me (and Other Concerns), was a New York Times best seller. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: The Mindy Project—isn't that a little narcissistic?
Mindy Kaling: Like, "Good for me! I got my own show!" I guess that means The Cosby Show or Everybody Loves Raymond were narcissistic, too. I think it just gives the audience an idea as to what to expect, namely me. In the show. A lot.

Can I call you Vera?
Ah, sure. I'm not sure I'll respond, though. Not even my parents call me that. To me, it sounds like the name of an 80-year-old Russian woman. I don't really identify with it.

I know your mother is an ob-gyn, but why'd you pick that for your character, instead of, say, a proctologist?
I think you might be the only person who thinks that being a proctologist would be more fun than being an ob-gyn. [Laughs.] The real answer is that I get to hang out with women. I thought that would be fun.

Do you think the world is really full of places like Dunder Mifflin's Scranton office?
I think so. There are lots of offices filled with earnest, nice people who are sort of clueless. Every time I talk to someone, they say they know someone just like Michael Scott.

That cast was so Massachusetts heavy, was it mandatory to be a Red Sox fan?
Yeah, it was pretty much a Red Sox Nation scenario.

Funniest person you know?
Probably B.J. Novak from Newton. Amy Poehler's pretty damn funny, too.

Why are all the funniest people from Boston?
It has something to do with the weather. It's so grim, it makes you look inward.

What's the advantage of a single-camera setup for a sitcom?
You can catch subtleties in a performance that you can't with a multicam setup. When you do multicams and an audience, you have to be more presentational because you have a proscenium. It's like a play. Not to get all technical and boring on you.

Funniest show ever on TV?
Fawlty Towers made me laugh the hardest.

Are you the Indian Lucille Ball?
I try not to go through life comparing myself to a hugely talented, famous dead person.

Is it harder to play yourself than someone else?
I'm not really playing myself, but there's definitely some overlap. And I've never played something wildly different, like a sociopathic serial killer. You don't see a lot of Indian women getting those roles, so perhaps there's an untapped market there.

What's an annoying un-PC Indian stereotype?
I'm not sure this counts, but people always ask me where I was born, which I find a little absurd.

What's the un-PC stereotype about Indians that you think is true?
I think Indian parents are psyched if their kids become doctors.

How do your parents feel about you using your Ivy League degree to do comedy?
My parents put a bigger premium on being able to brag about me than they did on me being a doctor or scientist. As long as they can brag, they're A-OK with my choices.

Which do you like more: writing or acting?
I like them the exact same amount, which is a lot.

What's it like being a smart girl in Hollywood?
It's great because it allows me to write my own material and not just act, or go in for auditions and wait for other people to decide my fate.

Ed Weeks. Is he as dreamy in real life?
He's even dreamier because he went to Cambridge and was in the Footlights Club. He's incredibly smart and funny, not a himbo at all. He's also super tall so when you meet him you just go, "Oh my God."

Fantasy love-scene partner?
For a smooch scene? Probably Chris Evans. But an actual sex scene? I could live my entire life without having to do that.

Are you a total prima donna on the set?
I run the set like Saddam Hussein ran Iraq.

Will you ever star in a Bollywood musical?
I don't think that in Bollywood casting circles I'm considered very palatable.

Do you have any medical knowledge?
I can do astonishingly little. I don't even know, if someone was choking in front of me, whether I could do anything but panic. I'm not bad around blood, though. No issue there.

Funniest thing you ever read about yourself?
Luckily, I'm not really the kind of person people care about seeing in the tabloids. The one thing that makes me mad is that online I'm frequently described as being 5'2", and it annoys me that there'd be such a specific wrong answer about my height. I'm 5'4". Two inches is a lot, especially for a woman.

Most men would feel that way, too.
[Laughs.] Well, now we've set the record straight. I feel like we've really accomplished something here. ✖✖✖

$20 MASS LOTTO TICKET On the surface, springing for a top-row ticket is the proletarian version of lighting a cigar with a $100 bill. And the surface of the scratch card is the critical element of the ritual, as there's a world of possibility beneath the latex finish. Between the purchase and the reveal, you're not throwing money away: You're challenging fate, super-charging a daydream. Coin in hand, it's a test of faith that leads even a staunch atheist to consider the possibility of a higher power. When the veneer is finally shed and hope is gone (and it will be), don't despair for the cash you wasted. Appreciate the value in having undergone a cheap reality check.

$46 MOZZARELLA WITH KING CRAB PAIRED WITH TWO GLASSES OF CHATEAU BARGEMONE, 2011 Pull up a seat at chef Lydia Shire's mozzarella bar at Scampo, and you can indulge in her famously unctuous, house-made offerings, or burrata and low-cholesterol quark. But to experience the full culinary vim of the kitchen, share a plate of the bufala mozzarella topped with sliced avocados, buttered king crab meat, wasabi aioli and herbed olive-and-tomato oil. Blending the creaminess of the bufala and avocado is inspired; marrying them to the rich snap of the crab claw is art. Match it with the dry, berry aromas of the rosé for an array of textures and flavors worth a much higher price tag.

When it comes to boxing, Boston comes out swinging. We've got fighting Irish tattoos that peek out under our sleeves, Lowell native Micky Ward (plus his Golden Globe–nominated counterpart, Mark Wahlberg) and self-proclaimed townies who give a whole other definition to the phrase "lights out." For those looking to hone their uppercut, or even to learn what one is, check out the private classes at the Ring Boxing Club, where students can learn the ropes to a different type of all-body workout (it burns an average of 900 calories per class, even without a crazed Christian Bale running around).

Tommy McInerney, who trains athletes like the Bruins' Shawn Thornton, is one of six coaches available for a one-on-one lesson. A disclaimer: He starts you off with three straight minutes of rope jumping. As a reward, he patiently teaches you punching techniques, including hand and leg placement. Then, after donning gloves, you head to the ring for some pad work, where, even though you may look ridiculous, you'll feel like you deserve a championship belt. The lesson ends with a brief and exhausting match with a punching bag. Now you won't just roll with the punches anymore. You'll strike back.

TRANSIT GLORIA

THE JOYS AND PERILS OF OWNING A LUXE CAR IN BOSTON

BACK WHEN I LIVED IN BEACON HILL, there was a guy who owned a blue Audi S4, which he parked on the street. The S4 was a flagship for its day, and it had the upgraded super-bright H.I.D. headlights. Which, unfortunately, also fit the lesser Audi A4, making them a favorite target for enterprising thieves. I'd walk past that car on a given morning, and its headlights would be gone. I'd see it the next week, and it would have new ones. The following week, the headlights would be gone again. And so on, repeatedly. That guy just wasn't giving up on having headlights in Boston.

Besides the random acts of thievery, there are plenty of other factors that can make you want to buy a Charlie Card and a Zipcar membership and never look back. Car owners contend with gnarly traffic, scant parking, exorbitant insurance premiums, blizzards, potholes and speeding tickets. If you have a car in Boston, you may as well drive a rusty Ford Granada held together with gum and Dukakis-era bumper stickers. And yet many of us, despite abundant logic arguing otherwise, still buy cars that are far too clean and new and larded up with horsepower, relative to the fate they're slated to endure. I guess at some point, you want the car of your dreams, and damn the logic.

That's how it went with me and the M3. The M3 is BMW's hottest 3-series, and I'd always wanted one. Eventually, depreciation dropped a silver M3 convertible down to Honda money, and I bought the car that I assumed would magically transform Boston's streets into my personal playground. Sure, I'd have to park it on the street in Southie, but lots of people park nice cars on the street in Southie.

Street parking didn't turn out to be the problem. At least, not the whole problem. Yes, the front bumper got torn off by an absentminded driver (the culprit honorably arranged repair at his cousin's garage in Dorchester). And in the winter, passing snowplows would spray salt slush all over my poor M3, precipitating the need for brake jobs even when we hadn't been driving the car. So street parking wasn't great. But driving was worse.

There was a six-hour drive back from Burlington—not the one in Vermont, but the one right next to Woburn—when the accumulation was so high that the BMW's front bumper was literally plowing snow, and I think I depressed the clutch pedal 3,000 times.

There was the time my wife lightly rear-ended a pickup truck down by the waterfront (when you have a sports car, any vehicle you hit will inevitably be a truck made of solid iron) doing zero to the F150 and $2,000 in damage to the BMW. The elaborate power top would sometimes go out of alignment, its various hydraulic levers and rods refusing to cooperate until a wizened dealership guru—I imagine he looked like Geppetto—coaxed it back to health, in the process generating a $1,500 repair invoice. Nothing that went wrong with the BMW ever seemed to cost less than $1,500.

Possibly the least-expected M3 ownership hazard came in the Financial District one sunny day while I was waiting to pick up Heather after work. Our dog was in the back seat. Perhaps you're aware that dogs are equipped with an anal gland? Well, they are. And if you startle a dog badly enough, that anal gland might spontaneously expel its contents, which smells even worse than you imagine. So there we were, enjoying top-down BMW Boston summer leisure, when one of the Faneuil Hall horses clomped around the corner and peered down into the car. Our dog, though accustomed to the usual city bustle of traffic and humanity, was unprepared for the abrupt appearance of a large equine snout in his field of vision. Yikes, scary horse! And then, anal gland, all over the back seat.

After about three years we capitulated to reality, selling the M3 and buying a pragmatic all-wheel-drive Mitsubishi Outlander. It took a whole week before someone keyed it.

While an M3 is a sweet car by any measure, it's not an exotic car. But by dint of my job as a car reviewer, I've learned firsthand that truly high-dollar machinery introduces its own particular set of conundrums. When I had the keys to a $450,000 Rolls-Royce Phantom Drophead convertible, parking became a source of utmost anxiety. A drive to the South End occasioned the complete rearrangement of a friend's one-car garage, and even then the two-door Rolls barely squeezed into a space that normally houses a Grand Cherokee. But what was I going to do: Put it at a meter, or attempt to navigate the bollard-filled subterranean labyrinths of an hourly garage?

The Rolls made me nervous even when I returned it to the locked Southie parking lot where I rented an off-street spot to safely stash cars of this ilk. Southie is, paradoxically, a pretty good place to park a Rolls. For one thing, cars don't get messed with in Southie unless someone has a reason to mess with them. For another, nobody in Southie gives a crap about your fancy Rolls. One day when I was navigating into my space, a neighbor standing on her back deck yelled, "Hey, what is that? Some kind of Lincoln?"

Exotic cars also earn you attention of an unwanted sort, namely from the police. I was driving a $150,000 Ford GT in the Big Dig tunnel, listening to the thunderous exhaust carom off the walls, when blue lights filled my mirrors. The state trooper didn't even know how fast I was going (answer: not very, because I was in second gear), but he knew he wanted to give the guy in the Batmobile a stern dressing-down. And he did, at great length, concluding, "I'm down here all the time. Don't let me see you again." This is the kind of constabulary encounter you don't have when you drive a Honda Accord.

At least on that night I'd been driving fast enough to rev the motor up a little bit. The first car I ever tested was a screaming-red 2002 Chevy Corvette Z06, and I naively steered it straight into an annual travel debacle—I-90 West on Columbus Day weekend. A few weeks ago, that particular Friday exodus saw an epic 45-mile traffic jam, but the mess I encountered with the 'Vette probably wasn't much better. I had 405 horsepower under my foot, yet it took me three hours to get to Worcester. Screw the foliage, honey, we're going to see whatever's happening at the DCU Center. Monster trucks? Great. I wish I had one right now.

"STORROW DRIVE AT 4 AM IS THE WORLD'S BEST VIDEO GAME."

Maybe, in your daydreams of your perfect car, you've got it parked at your perfect vacation house. And I'm sure there are Lambos, Ferraris and Astons sprinkled along the coast and up in the mountains. But you know what everyone on Nantucket drives? Old '80s Jeeps. A couple of months ago, I was talking to Leon Miller, founder of Wagonmaster, a Texas company that restores Jeep Grand Wagoneers to better-than-new condition. "We've got 43 or 44 on Nantucket," Miller told me. "People there can drive anything their heart desires. And they're driving Grand Wagoneers." These are $40,000 Grand Wagoneers, I might add. There's nothing more New England than spending a lot of money to look like you didn't spend a lot of money.

I love an old Wagoneer, and one of those pragmatic beasts might fit in my Powerball-funded garage, but I still pine for a fast car. For all the tribulations it put me through (and vice versa), my memories of the M3 are rose-tinted—blasting down Comm. Ave. with the top down on the first really warm spring day; hugging the Atlantic on Jerusalem Road in Cohasset, stuffing the trunk with luggage for a weekend road trip to Bar Harbor. Around here, the opportunities for automotive bliss come fleetingly, and, as such, their impact is magnified. "In New England, we appreciate it all the more when a nice day happens," says Jamie Liu, a local Ferrari club member who owns a 430 Spider. "It's not the same if you can do it any day of the year. Boston has more than its share of crappy roads and rush hour traffic, but we're also close to the White Mountains, a rally around the Quabbin Reservoir or a summer cruise along the beach. Storrow Drive at 4 am is the world's best video game. Plus, my husband, with the emotional maturity of a 17-year-old, really enjoys hearing the Italian V-8 singing at 8,000 RPM while bombing through the Tip O'Neill tunnel."

I might warn you about that last one. I happen to know of an ornery state trooper. He's down there all the time. ✖✖✖

DEAD AHEAD

WHILE SOME SPEND post-Halloween days coming down from their sugar highs, others are just getting the party started. Día de los Muertos (that's Day of the Dead to you gringos) begins on Nov. 1, when people in Mexico, Latin America and across the globe celebrate the deceased by embracing the afterlife. In coordination with its ongoing Mexican folk art collection, the Peabody Museum of Archaeology and Ethnology joins the fiesta with a new altar (quintessential to any Día de los Muertos celebration), Mexican treats, sugar-skull crafts, music by Mariachi Véritas de Harvard and Los Mezcales and more Nov. 2–3. Get your (free) tickets before the witching hour is over.

Domestic Affairs

Image Is Everything Christopher Shinn isn't shy about poking fun at the world of politics, especially now, at the height of the election season. In his play Now or Later, the former Clinton gubernatorial campaign staffer presents his own take on White House crises. The story follows the son of a presidential candidate who stirs the pot when controversial photos of him surface on the Internet. Shinn explores not only political scandal, but also a family's fight to balance normalcy and career obligations. Journey to the borders of political incorrectness at Now or Later, playing at the Huntington Theatre through Nov. 10.

Are You Afraid of the Dark?

Scared Silly Five kids visit an abandoned cabin for the weekend and are chased around by some crazy killers. Sounds like your run-of-the-mill, cheesy horror flick, right? Instead, cowriter Joss Whedon, the master behind cult classics like Buffy the Vampire Slayer, Firefly and Dollhouse, and director Drew Goddard subvert the horror clichés with sci-fi and satire to reinvent the slasher flick formula. Cabin in the Woods blends murder with the metatextual, as Whedon's characters find themselves trapped in a deadly plot-within-a-plot. Quake with fear and laughter at the Brattle Theatre on Oct. 31. Sarah Hagman

Reviews by Sean Burns

Alex Cross ★ Turns out if you take Tyler Perry out of a dress, he's got nothing. The self-made star of Madea's bizarre drag phenomenon makes a bid for mainstream fame by taking over for Morgan Freeman in this reboot of the Seven-lite franchise based on James Patterson's best-selling novels. As the titular sage detective/psychologist, Perry wanders around crime scenes mumbling in a monotone and looking uncomfortable while everybody talks about what a genius he is. Good to know, since we don't see Cross do anything resembling detective work. He and braying jackass partner Tommy Kane (Edward Burns) get stuck with a bunch of grisly homicides, which lands them in the crosshairs of Matthew Fox's shirtless psycho. (If there's a worse performance this year than the bug-eyed, screeching Fox, I haven't seen it.) It's all vaguely nasty and blisteringly stupid, with a great deal of plot holes, torture and dull forensics. In short, this is like paying 10 bucks to see every CBS procedural that I already don't bother to watch at home. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (At Coolidge Corner, Somerville, West Newton Cinema and the suburbs.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At West Newton.)

The Bourne Legacy ★ In 2007, Matt Damon and director Paul Greengrass brought amnesiac assassin Jason Bourne home to New York City with a smashing finale to a trilogy that only got better as it went along. Five years later, for no discernible reason other than a quick buck, series screenwriter Tony Gilroy cashes in with a superfluous franchise reboot, starring Jeremy Renner because classy Matt Damon wouldn't touch this garbage with a 10-foot pole. Renner stars as a chemically enhanced soldier targeted for elimination by the same old gang of white guys in front of computer screens. The catch is, Renner needs to find some more government-issued smart pills, otherwise, this superspy becomes super dumb. Call it Code Name: Algernon. The pacing is dead, and the structure is a disaster, as the story introduces an antagonist in the final reel—during a climactic chase—that would've arrived 40 minutes into any competent movie. (In the suburbs.)

Celeste and Jesse Forever ★★ ½ Considering it's one of those vanity projects in which TV actors try to break into film by making a Sundance entry about the relationships of well-off urbanites, Rashida Jones' screenwriting debut isn't half bad. Or at least it's agreeable in that mode of movies that rip off When Harry Met Sally in the way When Harry Met Sally ripped off Annie Hall. Jones stars as a high-strung PR type who recently divorced her longtime sweetheart (Andy Samberg) even though they've remained best friends, and he still bums around in the guesthouse. It's clear their chummy arrangement has kept them from moving on, at least until the plot contrives to have him deal with accidental fatherhood after a fling. The kicker is that sometimes people grow into the person you always wanted them to be after your time together is over—a melancholy conceit that this affable, sitcom-y picture doesn't quite figure out how to handle. (In the suburbs.)

The Details ★ Tobey Maguire stars as a philandering husband in this ghastly sophomore effort from writer/director Jacob Aaron Estes, who helmed the promising Mean Creek back in 2004 and apparently has done nothing since, besides watch American Beauty over and over again. Yes folks, it's another one of those movies about the dysfunctional secrets lurking just beneath the manicured lawns of suburbia. What a novel concept. Frustrated with his marriage to his shrewish wife (Elizabeth Banks), Maguire's character blunders his way through a blotto hookup with his med-school buddy (Kerry Washington) before accidentally knocking up the creepy cat lady next door (Laura Linney, uncharacteristically awful). He also donates one of his kidneys to a kindly black pal played by Dennis Haysbert, so he can't be all bad? Apparently not content with shrill misogyny, The Details also gets pretty damn racist in the final stretch, mustering up a warmed-over Woody Allen murder plot with implications so offensive, I'm frankly shocked that such a respectable cast took part in this swill. (At Boston Common and available via Video On Demand.)

Dredd ★★★ Weirdly pedigreed for such a down-and-dirty B-picture, Dredd was scripted by novelist Alex Garland and shot by groundbreaking cinematographer Antony Dod Mantle. For a movie that consists mostly of people getting shot in the face, it's much wittier than expected. As the title character, a sneering, killing machine in a post-apocalyptic dystopia, Karl Urban's performance is particularly droll. Eyes obscured by doofy-looking headgear, working strictly with a scowl and often hilariously rigid body language, he makes that Robocop reboot that's in the works seem awfully unnecessary. There's a perverse integrity to Dredd's nastiness. You'll keep waiting for them to try and soften up the character, or maybe just stop blowing people's heads off. No dice. Olivia Thirlby, working by Urban's side and doing a passable Milla Jovovich imitation, is on hand to supply the inevitable crisis of conscience, ever so slightly acknowledging that this is all just a queasy police-brutality–empowerment fantasy. But as far as such things go, it's kind of a hoot. (At Boston Common.)

End of Watch ★ ½ Training Day screenwriter David Ayer's third directorial effort unfortunately attempts to yoke his hard-boiled cop routine to that ever-wearying found-footage craze. The gimmick here is that beat cop Brian Taylor (Jake Gyllenhaal) is taking a night class in documentary filmmaking, so he and partner Mike Zavala (Michael Peña) wear buttonhole video cameras in their uniform pockets, and the whole movie jerks around in a fish-eyed, low resolution blur. Trying to follow the action made me so nauseated, I had to take a break halfway through and walk around the lobby just to keep from throwing up. Gyllenhaal and Peña have a relaxed rapport behind the wheel of a squad car, even if the baby-faced Gyllenhaal is never remotely credible as a steroidal knucklehead. Grandiose cartel baddies carry gold-plated AK-47s, conveniently videotaping their crimes for no other reason than that the movie needs us to see them. Improbable set-pieces and overscaled shoot-outs ensue, with the jagged YouTube aesthetic only underlining the phoniness of all these Hollywood clichés. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Looper ★★★ Writer/director Rian Johnson's nifty, time-bending thriller stars Bruce Willis as the future Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The latter plays a hit man for the mob, knocking off targets beamed back to 2044 from 30 years hence. Except for one fateful day when he's supposed to shoot... himself? Johnson's intriguingly lo-fi vision of the future is full of vintage blunderbusses, designer drugs and a tricky maze of paradoxical timelines. Jeff Daniels drops by for a hilarious supporting turn as a bored gangster from the future, but the main event is Gordon-Levitt's uncanny Willis impersonation. He's got the squint and the sneer down pat, making his distracting prosthetic nose somewhat unnecessary. Johnson, who helmed the terrific art-house oddity Brick and the significantly less charming Brothers Bloom, tries to keep the sci-fi elements grounded with rural farmhouses and workaday diners. He bites off a bit more than he can chew, but kudos to Willis for tweaking his own iconography and heading into waters much darker than initially expected. A clever, crafty little picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Paperboy ★★★ Precious director Lee Daniels' hysterically overheated adaptation of Pete Dexter's novel became notorious at the Cannes Film Festival because of a scene where Nicole Kidman pees on Zac Efron. That's not even the weirdest part. The suddenly unstoppable Matthew McConaughey stars as a good ol' boy returning to his swampy Florida home to investigate the murder of a corrupt sheriff. An awful John Cusack plays a cretin who just might be wrongly accused. Kidman headlines as his beloved, in a campy, white-trash tour de force, while Efron roils around in an unrequited hormonal frenzy. To call the movie lurid would be an understatement. It's a sweaty, cheerfully disreputable picture that offhandedly says more about race relations than The Help tried to shout from rooftops. Macy Gray narrates as the maid who's seen it all, and her maternal relationship with Efron provides the only ray of light in this dark and nasty noir, one that's really more about social marginalization than any mystery. Shame about that ending. (At Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–styled sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female songstresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throwaway one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Queen of Versailles ★★★ ½ Originally intended as a snickering portrait of the grotesquely wealthy David and Jackie Siegel's quest to build the biggest, tackiest homestead in the history of real estate, director Lauren Greenfield's research lucked into a recession, and the economic collapse transformed a bit of reality-show lookie-loo into a strangely empathetic depiction of what happens when billionaires are suddenly forced to live like mere millionaires. Once, Siegel was the nation's most successful Florida time-share hustler, selling dreams of luxury to those who could barely afford them. But the chickens come home to roost with a vengeance after 2008's Wall Street disaster, and his adorably dim-witted trophy wife, Jackie, with breasts inflated to the size of basketballs, never quite grasps the enormity of the cataclysm. You can tell how much time has gone by in this picture by the amount of dog crap littering the carpet, as the couple's absurd manse lapses into decay. Their plight becomes America's writ large, except more tasteless. (At West Newton.)

The Sessions ★★ The kind of earnest crowd-pleaser that kills at festivals, The Sessions sounds like a parody of a Sundance movie. Sensitive poet Mark O'Brien (nicely played by John Hawkes) is confined to an iron lung but longs to lose his virginity. After attaining permission from his rascally, longhaired Catholic priest (William H. Macy), O'Brien hires a professional sex therapist (Helen Hunt) whose "body awareness exercises" assist our hero in the quest to "attempt intercourse." Complicated emotions ensue. The Sessions is such a mild, sweet-natured little movie that disliking it makes me feel like a terrible person. Hawkes exudes kindness and decency, but Macy's rock 'n' roll clergyman is never once believable, though charming all the same. Hunt gives one of those performances critics are obligated to describe as "brave" because she's naked most of the time. Touched by an Angel director Ben Lewin brings such a plodding, visually inert TV-movie aesthetic, The Sessions looks and feels like something you'd see on the Hallmark channel if they allowed full-frontal nudity. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Seven Pyschopaths ★★★ Playwright Martin McDonagh's second feature film dearly wants to be a poison letter to all the swaggering stereotypes that put food on his table. A vicious Irish Catholic with a punitive temperament, McDonagh seeks to bite the hand that feeds, casting Colin Farrell as a drunken screenwriter (naturally named Martin) who falls in with a couple of low-rent dog-nappers (Sam Rockwell and Christopher Walken), who make their living hustling pooches from the tar pits, eventually returning the canines to grateful owners and cashing sizeable reward checks. Problems arise when they swipe a shih tzu from an emotionally imbalanced crime-lord played by Woody Harrelson, and then all the wrong people get murdered. It's a silly, stupid series of contrivances over a dumb little dog, which I think is probably McDonagh's point. Seven Psychopaths aims to mock a culture of potty-mouthed gangster-wannabes who have seen too many movies, calling out the viewer for engaging in such adolescent empowerment fantasies—while at the same time working pretty well as an example of the genre. A neat trick. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sleepwalk With Me ★★ Otherwise known as NPR Goes to the Movies, Sleepwalk With Me was produced by hipster godhead Ira Glass and takes a great 10 minutes or so of radio and stretches it out to an 80-minute running time, with no idea what to do with the visuals. You've probably heard the plot by now. I believe it started on The Moth spoken-word circuit, before Glass picked it up for his radio show. Short version: Mike Birbiglia is an aspiring stand-up comic not in love with his fiancée, and his anxiety manifests itself in a weird sleepwalking disorder. Weeks on the road precipitate a somnambulistic breakdown, and he has to make a few life choices. The end. This is a great radio bit, and Birbiglia has a conversational tone that's awfully ingratiating. Problem is that somebody decided to make his story a movie. Birbiglia spends the early reels talking directly into the camera, and the DIY aesthetic reeks of amateur hour. Nobody bothered to outsize this interior monologue into an actual motion picture. (At Kendall and in the suburbs.)

Smashed ★ ½ Movies about recovery always conveniently leave out the hard parts. Director James Ponsoldt (working from a script he wrote with Susan Burke) also forgot to film a third act to this annoyingly truncated tale of a hard-drinking schoolteacher (Mary Elizabeth Winstead) who hops on the wagon, much to the chagrin of her boozy husband (Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul). How does one still relate to a spouse when your lives suddenly take drastically divergent paths? It's an excellent question that a better film might've addressed. Instead, here we just suffer through goofball subplots with married sitcom stars Megan Mullally and Nick Offerman clowning for comic relief. The former plays the school principal, mistaking Winstead's hungover vomiting for morning sickness. The latter is an AA sponsor with a secret crush played for giggles. Winstead is appealing, and Paul is always dependable, but Smashed lazily leaves all their dramatic developments off-screen by discreetly fading to black and skipping ahead a few months. Apparently nobody wanted to write the rough stuff. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Taken 2 ★★ ½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie cold-bloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (In the suburbs.)

Trouble With the Curve ★★ ½ Clint Eastwood is never less than delightful in Trouble With the Curve, an otherwise lousy movie helmed by his longtime assistant director Robert Lorenz. The octogenarian icon stars as a crotchety baseball scout trying to cling to his job with the Atlanta Braves, despite the fact that he's obviously going blind. There's nobody better at being a curmudgeon, and Eastwood growls and cusses before displaying stray moments of unexpected delicacy. His semi-estranged daughter, Mickey (named for Mantle, naturally), steps in to do what she can. Played by Amy Adams, she's never quite credible as a baseball-obsessed tomboy. A believability-stretching road trip to North Carolina ensues, but there's really not all that much going on in Randy Brown's determinedly low-stakes screenplay. At least not much besides the pleasure of watching the lead performances. Trouble With the Curve doesn't just remind you what a wonderful screen presence Eastwood is; it makes you appreciate him even more as a director because Lorenz does such a crummy job. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Won't Back Down ★ Far be it from me to suggest an untoward agenda, but this steaming pile of phony uplift—funded by conservative Christian billionaire Phil Anschutz and released by right-wing overlord Rupert Murdoch—attempts to co-opt every scrappy underdog cliché in the inspirational playbook. Fashioning a feel-good family-friendly triumph of union busting and privatization, Won't Back Down softens up the controversial Parent Trigger laws that allow parents the authority to take over failing public schools. Maggie Gyllenhaal lamely tries to Erin Brockovich things up as a sassy Pittsburgh single mom, enlisting the help of Viola Davis' burnt-out classroom veteran to rescue these poor children from lazy, tenured teachers. Because the problem here isn't social inequity or class disadvantage. It's the unions, stupid. The inanity on display here is breathtaking. Won't Back Down presents a utopian fantasy where no child gets left behind, just so long as we finally free ourselves from the shackles of organized labor. (At Fenway.)

The Words ★ Hilariously pretentious with almost nothing to say, this ponderous would-be epic from directors Brian Klugman and Lee Sternthal crafts three stories in a nesting-doll structure, each plot more ludicrous than the last. Bradley Cooper stars as a failed novelist who discovers a brilliant manuscript in a Hemingway-era satchel. Passing the book off as his own, he incurs the wrath of the original author, played by Jeremy Irons, who shows up here in some terrible old-age makeup and tries to singlehandedly make the picture amusing by sheer force of his scenery-chewing. The wannabe Philip Glass score and ostentatious camera movements suggest a bigger production, so the filmmakers add a badly miscast Dennis Quaid as a rough-and-tumble novelist spouting the picture's thesis statements. It's a movie about literature made by people who don't seem to like books very much. The Words grapples with antiquated notions of writers as Mailer-esque he-men, swaggering and screwing their way through a luxurious literary scene that doesn't actually exist anymore. This is a deeply stupid, silly picture. (In the suburbs.)

Wuthering Heights ★★★ You know a movie is doing something right when you can feel its weather. There's a brutally damp chill to director Andrea Arnold's rough-hewn adaptation of Heathcliff and Catherine's tragic romance. One thing's for sure, this is not your mother's Emily Brontë movie. Excising most of the dialogue and adding some four-letter invectives, Arnold trashes predictable period niceties in favor of bracing handheld camerawork, natural lighting and sets you can smell from a mile away. There's a jagged, restless eroticism to the doomed lovers' inarticulate childhood yearnings, and for an hour or so I thought I might be watching the movie of the year. But every film version of Heights remains stymied by Brontë's structure, and replacing the cast halfway through proves disastrous—the older versions of these characters are nowhere near as compelling as the young performers. Still, it's a harsh, unsparing vision that demands a good deal more of the audience than your typical Classics Illustrated fare. By tearing apart the text, Arnold uncovered the story's vitality. (At Kendall Square.)

Clark Bars

Don't Fret

Ever wonder what the president looks like when he's rocking out? Austin native Gary Clark Jr. can tell you. The bluesy-rocker not only performed at the White House alongside Rolling Stone legend Mick Jagger, but he also lit up this year's music festival circuit with performances at SXSW, Bonnaroo and Coachella. Clark's combination of silky vocals, gritty blues riffs and a hint of country twang has defined his sound, launching his Bright Lights EP into Rolling Stone's 50 Best Albums of 2011. Get into the groove with Gary Clark Jr. Nov. 2–3 at the Sinclair.

On the Road

Campaign Classics

Debates, policies and polls galore: 'Tis the season to be voting. The Grand Circle and Robert Klein galleries are on board with Every Four Years, an exhibition of vintage photographs and posters spanning the 1948 to 2008 elections. From images of intimate moments to huge historical events, this exhibit chronicles political imagery's transformation over the past century. Campaign placards on loan from the Library of Congress complement the photos, illustrating not only where we've been, but how we got there. Revisit the political past with Every Four Years, on display at the Grand Circle Gallery through Nov. 17.

PRIMATE SUSPECTS

Going Bananas

How much fun is a barrel of monkeys? Whatever the amount, the Monkey Helpers' Food Festivale to benefit Helping Hands, held at the WGBH studios, matched it.

The evening, for which The Improper was a sponsor, featured a feast courtesy of restaurants like Mistral, Basho, Eastern Standard, Trade, Market and Masa, while the beer, wine and vodka flowed like Champagne is supposed to.

The soignée crowd included the likes of event chair Lisa Flores, celebrity chef Jamie Mammano, latter-day Lucille Ball Julia Owens, the couture-crazed Laura Baldini, brunette bombshell Amy Nel Jacobs, the dog-mad Dietrich Falkenthal, special guest star Jenny Johnson,and one woman whose comments about the men included, "He's cute, in a John Boy Walton kind of way," and "He's too short. I'm short. I can't have midget kids." Meanwhile, a woman who received a compliment on her necklace said, "Guilt presents are always the best."

There was a killer band, they screened a film that didn't leave a dry eye in the house, and most amazing of all: For an incredible evening out in Boston, the parking was free.

Check Under the Hood...

The crème de la crème of the tote bag set turned out in full force for WBUR's gala to honor 35 years of Car Talk, the automotive equivalent of Amos 'n' Andy (minus the racism), and its hosts, Tom and Ray Magliozzi. Held at the Boston Sheraton, the evening began with cocktails and one of the best silent auctions on the charity circuit. The smell from the slider bar had some guests salivating, while others drooled over the $15,000 diamond ring being raffled. Although there was one woman who said, "How many diamond rings do I need? All my husbands gave me one."

Rubbing elbows with the NPR types were hotel magnate Roger Saunders and the lovely Norma, doting parents Tedd and Ella Saunders, iconoclastic blueblood Linda Cabot Black and her daughter, Sophie, travel titan Andy Levine and the über-chic Beth Rosenberg, activist and all-around-mensch John Rosenthal with the flawless Maureen, the dapper David Shepperd, tech exec Edward Boesel, and one son of a prominent philanthropist who said, "My father has a strange fondness for endowing elevators. I said to him, 'Is our last name Otis or something?'"

On hand to toast Click and Clack were on-air personalities like NPR's Nina Totenberg, Here & Now host Robin Young, On Point's Tom Ashbrook and All Things Considered's Sacha Pfeiffer.

The evening's funniest exchange: One guest bragged about winning a $2,500 gift certificate for $1,200 in the silent auction, two years in a row. "I actually made money off of WBUR!" he said, to which another guest replied, "You're the only person in the room who can say that." ×××

In Memoriam

If good deeds leave ripples like a pebble tossed into a pond, Ruth Gordon Shapiro's legacy will be more like waves crashing on a beach. The great philanthropist and matriarch was both elegant and down-to-earth, idealistic but practical, and generous beyond reckoning. Although she lived primarily in Palm Beach later in life, she and her husband of 73 years, Carl (who was by her side when she died), have been so civic-minded that their names seem to be carved into every wall, plaque and building in Boston.

A Chelsea native and graduate of Wellesley College, she was a concert-level pianist who gave lessons to underprivileged youth. Not content to merely donate money, she poured her time and passion into the charities she supported, which included Brigham and Women's Hospital, Boston Medical Center, Dana-Farber Cancer Institute, Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center, the Museum of Fine Arts, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Palm Beach Opera, the Norton Museum of Art and the Kravis Center (both in Palm Beach), Wellesley College and Brandeis University, and that's merely the tip of her charitable iceberg. May her memory be a blessing. And the next time you set foot in one of the places mentioned above, you might want to thank whatever higher power you believe in that she lived among us.

ALL FOR A GOOD MAWS
Tony Maws photographed by Heath Robbins

The IMPROPER

General Hospitality

Throwing a good party is like chemistry's valence bond theory: It's all about orbitals between individual atoms, attraction and repulsion, and the likelihood of things going soluble in a liquid compound. A good host knows what's combustible and when to shake matters up. He knows how to take a bunch of disparate elements and make them go bang.

Adam DeTour

That's not to say there's a recipe for a successful holiday party. (You will need: 1 tray crudités; 1 "family-sized" tub hummus; that white-haired party-crasher dude who shows up everywhere. Alcohol to taste.) You can invite Truman Capote, Mata Hari, a barrel of monkeys and the entire court of Louis XIV, and the evening can still turn out a whimpering dud.

The trick to avoiding social death isn't a judicious playlist or open bar. It's the element of surprise. Create a conversation piece. So, for instance, at a toga party, wait until everyone's deep into the canapés, then suddenly yank out a sword and scream, "Ave Imperator, morituri te salutant!" before viciously stabbing the ranch dip. At an office party, amuse your coworkers by reciting Keats' "Ode to a Nightingale" in a trilling falsetto, and when you get to the line, "Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!" start shooting three-pointers over everyone's heads. At a child's birthday, when the candles are lit, blast everybody with a fire hose. The point is to get people talking.

In this issue, Jonathan Soroff checks out how chef Tony Maws of Craigie on Main cooks a holiday spread.

THE CUT AND THRUST

FOWL PLAY

SO, A DUCK AND A CHICKEN WALK into a turkey. Voilà turducken—a chicken stuffed inside a duck squeezed inside a turkey. You can purchase this holiday staple preassembled at Coolidge Corner's the Meat House. "Why not have multiple meats?" asks general manager Chris Gacosta, who receives between 20–40 turducken orders per season. Butchers are beginning to think even further outside the carcass. The Meat House also offers a fun-sized turducken, a turducken wrapped in bacon (aptly named a turbaconducken) and even a turducken-filled pig—now is not the season for counting calories. To eat more birds of a feather jammed together, try the rôti sans pareil: a 16-piece magnum opus with birds like larks, warblers and partridges. This year, don't just talk turkey.

DIGGING DEEP

OLD FRIENDS FARM GINGER
$12 per pound/$20 for a 2-pound bag
Available at Copley Square Farmers' Market through November oldfriendsfarm.com

These aren't those gnarly, fibrous bulbs you see in the grocery store. Old Friends Farm in Amherst sells ginger that's pink and creamy white, as the roots are young—just seven months old compared to the more mature beige ginger that's left in the dirt almost twice as long. The age difference makes them tender, sweet and worth seeking out at the Atlas Farm stand at the Copley Farmers' Market. (And if you happen to be in Amherst on a Saturday, they sell fresh tumeric there, too.) The season ends at the end of the month, so stock up, as the young roots freeze well and pickle perfectly. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Best Guest

TOAST THE HOST

So you had a fling with your coworker, and now you're invited to his or her holiday party? Cambridge's Gabrielle Stone of award-winning Stone Event Planning knows just what to bring as a host gift. Here are suggestions for presents for when not showing up is even more awkward than whatever got you invited in the first place.

FOURTH COUSIN, TWICE REMOVED The last time you saw cousin Barry—or is it Larry?—may have been his bar mitzvah. But if your folks insist you celebrate the festival of lights with him, bring along fresh pastries or a box of treats from Beacon Hill Chocolates.

THE TITLE-STEALER Your coworker got the promotion that totally should've been yours. That doesn't mean you can't still show up at her apartment with a congratulatory bottle of Champagne and a firm—or extra firm—handshake. Check out Somerville's Wine and Cheese Cask, where the staff will help you find something on any salary (even if you did miss out on that raise).

WOULD'VE BEEN-LAWS Your ex's parents are sure to remember you as the one who got away, so even if you're done being naughty with junior, you can still play nice. Head to natural cosmetics store Fresh for some artisanal soaps. If it goes poorly, you can always wash your hands of the whole relationship. SARAH HAGMAN

GRILL GIRL

Plus new projects and positions

HER NAME IS Lola… and she's the new chef de cuisine at Ashmont Grill in Dorchester. Puerto Rican–born Lola Sotomayor-Ellis is a veteran of such hotspots as Tico, Via Matta and the Salty Pig, and a fan of what she calls the "social culture" at Chris Douglass' seven-year-old neighborhood fixture. Together, she and Douglass have worked up a winter-ready menu featuring the likes of gnocchi with house-smoked pork belly and sage brown butter; smoked cauliflower soup with fennel pollen and truffle oil, and pan-seared Norwegian salmon with cilantro-pepita pesto and pancetta-flavored green lentils. Also on tap at Ashmont is a new weekly theme night dubbed the Hot Mess, with wicked spicy dishes on Tuesdays.

CHEF JASON SANTOS SEEMS to be playing it safe for a change with his latest project, the something-for-everyone Abby Lane Food & Spirits. A two-level, 200-seat eatery in the Theater District, Abby Lane will focus on familiar American fare—the signature dish is spit-roasted chicken—and a variety of pizzas. Open daily until 2 am, the restaurant also has space for functions and private dining.

TONIC BUBBLES UP AGAIN: The initially short-lived spot in Jamaica Plain has reopened with a new chef, Jhony Delcid, and a partially revamped menu.

DUET RIGHT

Over the past two years, promotion company Bowery Presents has branched out from its New York and Philly bases to bring us acts like the Kills and Dr. Dog. Now they're taking on both Cambridge's music and restaurant scenes under a single roof. The Sinclair is opening in Harvard Square—for shows on Nov. 14 and for dining in early December. It's doing so sans gimmicks, shtick or rocker memorabilia.

"For us it's really important to establish roots in the neighborhood," says Josh Bhatti, who heads the Bowery's Boston office and booking. "We finally feel like after two years we're going to be able to deliver that full-concert experience that's made us so successful in New York."

The restaurant at the Sinclair has a separate entrance and will be open daily for lunch, dinner and late-night snacks, with brunch on the way. With two floors—including a 52-seat second-level patio—it features reclaimed wood, banquettes and intimate nooks with huge booths. The walls aspire for Americana without crossing into kitsch, displaying old radios and 45s among other mid-century trappings.

Bowery has never mixed food and music before, but the team and consulting chef Michael Schlow (Radius, Happy's, et al.) are positioning the restaurant to stand on its own. "The food has to have merit," says Schlow. "The whole idea of marketing 'farm to table'—every chef wants to cook that way, and we're no different."

Schlow and chef Marcellus Coleman, formerly of New York's Alias and Aureole, have built a diverse menu that emphasizes small plates and sharing. Coleman's take on the ever-trendy pork belly—here pastramied and presented slider-style—and "disco fries" (served crisp with ground chorizo, roasted poblanos and house-made cheese sauce) are seemingly designed as concrete foundations for a night on the town. Veggie-heavy dishes include a roasted golden beet salad with honey and thyme topped with a ricotta salata, and shaved Brussels sprouts with smoked bacon, quinoa and grapefruit zest.

Bhatti says the Sinclair will stock the booze-ual suspects (e.g. Pabst, Narragansett and other hipster favorites), as well as craft choices and a cocktail menu developed by West Side Lounge's Dave Werthman. It all aspires to a delicious and dynamic combination. "There's lots of great music in Boston, and there's lots of great restaurants," says Schlow. "But the idea of bringing these two together, it's going to be a nice, happy marriage."

Q&A

THE SMITTEN WORD

Smitten Kitchen blogger Deb Perelman prepares recipes from her new cookbook at Wellesley's Miele Gallery on Nov. 27.

How do you create your recipes?
Sometimes I'm inspired by a cookbook, other times it's something I had at a restaurant that really got me thinking. I always say I get a lot of ideas in the car. I don't drive—my husband's always doing the driving—and I'm looking out the window, and I'm like, "I wanna make rye English muffins."

How many recipes in your cookbook haven't appeared on your blog before?
Over 85 percent are new. I didn't want to just recopy my blog, I wanted it to be a value for the people who had been reading the site all these years, some who've asked for a cookbook. So there's just a handful of site favorites, and they're not even the most popular recipes, they're ones that I feel strongly say what I'm trying to say about food. If I just picked the most popular recipes, the entire book would've been chocolate and peanut butter.

What are you making for Thanksgiving this year?
We have two large families, and they host Thanksgiving, so I actually don't host. I'm in charge of dessert. So, although I love Thanksgiving food and cook it a lot, I've really never done a proper turkey, which is kind of incredible. There are definitely a lot of recipes that really came out of my dessert trials at Thanksgiving. One of them is the cheesecake-marbled pumpkin gingersnap tart. It's my idea of putting all my favorite pumpkin desserts into one. Another is the deepest-dish apple pie. It's an apple pie that you suspend in a springform pan, so it just makes this enormous beast.

Does your 3-year-old help out in the kitchen?
It depends on your definition of help. He likes hanging out there. He likes to ride his trike through. He was helping me peel hard-boiled eggs the other day, though that backfired when he got into the fridge the next day and decided he wanted to peel some hard-boiled eggs. We were all out of hard-boiled eggs, we just had regular eggs. I applaud his enthusiasm, while cleaning up his messes.

Drink of the Moment

ROOTING FOR IT

NAME: Cumberland County

PRICE: $13

INGREDIENTS: Old Overholt rye whiskey, Art in the Age root liqueur, Punt e Mes, Benedictine, Xocolatl Mole Bitters.

INVENTOR: Beverage director Rob Haberek. "It's a fall cocktail that I love."

CONCEPT: A classic Manhattan goes to backwoods Pennsylvania and commingles with a traditional recipe involving bark.

TONIC TALE: "I'm a huge fan of root beer," says Haberek. "But there was never a good root beer liqueur. This one's a little more grown up, and it's definitely cut back on the sweetness." Rather than a cloying imitation of soda, the liqueur plays on the strong herbal flavors of 18th-century drinks. Note the pronounced birchbark and peppermint.

TASTE: A Benedictine sweetness on the nose dips into deep, burnt caramel undercut by the herbs. The back end is medicinal, with inklings of spice from the bitters. It's like taking a sip of A&W, but with about a dozen layered dimensions and a mule-strength kick. This is, after all, a Manhattan at heart.

NAMESAKE: The mining region of Cumberland County, Pa., where root beer was invented as a teetotal alternative to old-fashioned root tea.

PAIR IT WITH: "It has a little sweetness," says Haberek. "You could do it with dessert, like chocolate cake, or something more bold. Steak or a burger."

TO DOG OWNERS EVERYWHERE WHO DISLIKE PEOPLE ADDRESSING YOUR DOG WITH A FRIENDLY HELLO: Maybe you're just jealous that people are chatting up your adorable furry friend and not you. Regardless, I will keep saying hello to your dog, and all canines, because contrary to your belief, someday, one will say hi back. Dog lovers everywhere

To the kind stranger at Angell Animal Medical Center: You could tell it was a bad morning for us when I came bustling in and cut you in the emergency line. Instead of being annoyed, you offered us help and even took care of the details, like the unattended car, which was the furthest thing from my mind. It was a sad day for us, but your compassionate gesture was not lost in the moment and won't be forgotten. Thank you. Jackson's family

To the old salty bartender at the Green Dragon: I've come in nearly every Sunday night since September with the same group of friends to watch the same band play the same songs. I always make my drink orders quick and efficient because having been a bartender, I understand how annoying a Redheaded Purple Slooter-shooter can be. I tip too much, always bring my empty glasses back to the bar and I smile like I'm getting paid for it. But good Lord, woman! Will the day ever come when it doesn't take 20 minutes to get your attention? Impatient patron

To the man sitting on the T who watched my struggle to stand with all my grocery bags: I'm not exactly a damsel in distress, but it wouldn't hurt for you to gain some chivalry and offer me your seat. I hope the I Love Lucy–style scene of me trying to balance a week's worth of meals on one arm amused you at least. Exhausted rider

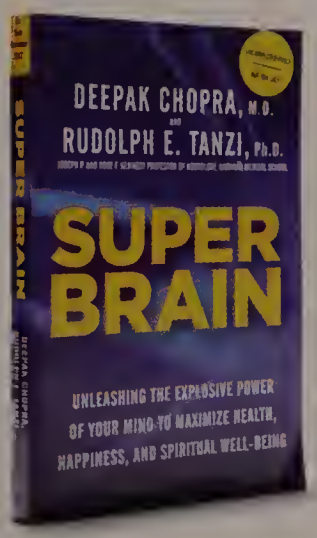
MAKE UP YOUR MIND



Thinking makes it so.

Dan Watkins

THE BRAIN CAN BE fascinatingly facile. It includes primitive areas (like the famous reptilian bit) and the cerebral cortex—known as the higher brain. And though we have an evolving awareness that plasticity in our neurons allows regeneration and repair, the brain is, in fact, also the servant of something nobler: the mind.

These two famous authors—Deepak Chopra, lecturer on medicine and meditation, and Rudolph Tanzi, Alzheimer's researcher—describe aspects of the mind/brain in tones that are, by turns, scientific, frisky, spiritual and therapeutic, showing that our higher consciousness has the ability, indeed the responsibility, to keep the cerebral ingredients in balance. Instinct, intelligence, emotion and intuition walk—or dance—through the organ, and what our minds emphasize and value gets fed back to the brain, digging a deep groove into it. Bad thoughts and habits are likewise etched.

Super Brain: Unleashing the Explosive Power of Your Mind to Maximize Health, Happiness and Spiritual Well-Being by Deepak Chopra and Rudolph E. Tanzi

Chopra and Tanzi have worked and taught in Boston.

Each section in the book is followed by a list of statements that flow from a negative, worrying attitude in the direction of a higher, more curious outlook. "I'm doing myself no good" becomes "My anxiety is just a feeling." It's enlightening, and lightening, to push your mind upwards to your better self. ✖✖✖

QUOTE PAGE 88: "When you are self-aware, you become unique. 'I am feeling X' turns into 'What do I think about X? Where is it taking me? What does it mean?' Someone who is angry can stop there with almost no self-awareness. An irritable boss who chews out his subordinates year after year is certainly aware that he gets angry. But without self-awareness, he won't see what he is doing to himself and to others."

Good Eats

TRIPLE PLAY

Gustazo is an authentic Cuban eatery with a full lineup of pork and beef dishes, but at this time of year it's the lone vegetarian entree that turns heads. The chatter is entirely deserved, as the three-part platter brings savory, satisfying life to the usual meatless mainstays. First there's an eggplant puree that's plush, rich (thanks to mayonnaise) and pops with crispy fried capers. A butternut squash bisque is concentrated with flavor, and there's an open-faced grilled cheese of seared queso drizzled with honey for dunking. It's a dish that takes your vegetarian expectations and bowls them over.

JUST COASTING

San Diego's nightlife is excellent. And then you get the beach.

PARTY PLATFORM Clubbers love the pool at the Hard Rock Hotel; hipsters hit Craft & Commence.

OUR OCEAN, OUR SHALE-gray Atlantic, doesn't impose. Unless you live in the suburbs or on the Southie rim, it rarely seeps into our lives, which are more defined by the spurts and runnels of sidewalk and stoplight, the tides of the commute. Bostonians don't wake in the morning to the wash of breakers under a blushed horizon. Other cities, like San Diego, do a better job of drawing the sea into their daily rhythms, especially when seen from a west-facing room on Pacific Beach at the Tower 23 Hotel.

Of the many reasons to buy a ticket to San Diego—speakeasies, panda bears, 70 degree temperatures in November—Pacific Beach is the clinching argument to flex your credit line. The broad yellow sand is a habitat for surfers, volleyball girls and lots of other obvious Californians, best watched from the second-floor roof deck of Tower 23, next to the firepit. A building with the lines and palette of a Steve Jobs product, its dogged modernity extends to the mold of the armchairs (spaceship dentist) and the clean contours and unbroken beach views at the extraordinary hotel restaurant, JRDN. Try the Californian Kumamoto oysters which—in this writer's reluctant admission—make our Duxbury ones taste like mealworms. Then order a prime, grass-fed California rib eye and start calculating the cost of a cross-country U-Haul rental.

For a noisier, more urban night out, check into the Hard Rock Hotel in the city's central Gaslamp District. Stepping past the Vegas-scale lobby into a private lounge, the rigorously cool attendants will mix you a cocktail after they've handed you your room keys. There's the expected memorabilia—George Harrison's handwritten lyrics for "While My Guitar Gently Weeps," a precious Shakira bra behind glass—as well as an upscale diner, a Pinkberry and a rooftop pool bar that seems to be a birthing ground for clubbers. Rooms are plush with cantilevered furniture, rain showers and integrated entertainment systems, but the hotel's biggest draw is an on-premises Nobu. Yes, it's a chain. Yes, the "new style" salmon sashimi costs

✓ Traveler's Checks

Located in Balboa Park, near the zoo, the San Diego Natural History Museum has thoughtful, family-friendly exhibits, including current displays on the history of chocolate and of the horse.

The pedestrian Seaport Village is a scenic shopping and dining development on the waterfront, ideal for fish tacos and haberdashery.

Take the bike path down Pacific Beach to Mission Beach's Olive Café for stellar, cheap breakfasts like soy chorizo burritos.

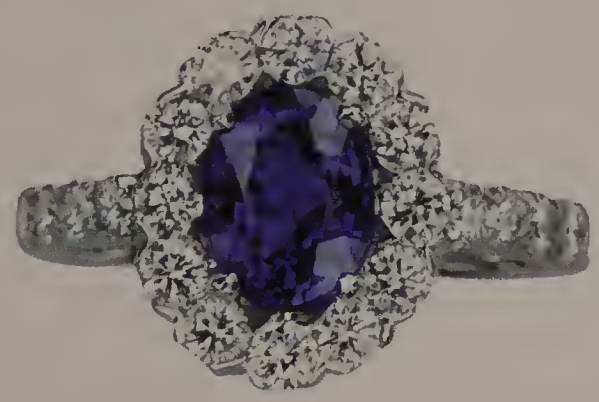
$21. Yes, the onyx bar and red leather booths try very, very hard to be sexy. And, yes, the miso black cod and the rock shrimp tempura are the best you've ever eaten. (For a more low-key base to explore the city, stay at the Sofia Hotel. It's elegant, affordable and in walking distance of the whole downtown, plus it's got a 24-hour yoga studio and a brasserie that serves flavored popcorn, like jalapeño Gruyère.)



Night in the Gaslamp District yields countless drinking and dining opportunities, and the locals turn out in droves once the lights go down. An enticing spot is Altitude Sky Lounge, a 22nd floor rooftop bar that offers pretty views of both the skyline and of primped San Diegans. When the Padres play, you can see straight down into Petco Park. Swapping martinis and firepits for bourbon and whimsy, hop a cab to Craft & Commerce in Little Italy. This is the sort of restaurant that happens when hipsters contract an obsession with charcuterie. The servers are all steeped in cocktail ephemera—bespoke drinks are the default—and the management pointedly refuses to serve either vodka or ketchup. There're bookshelves, taxidermy and decorative, self-aware slogans, like a mirror etched with the words, "This mirror is supposed to make the room look bigger than it actually is." The use of bacon is lavish: in the stuffed dates, the "cracker jacks," the ice cream sandwich.

For an even more original experience, make a (required) reservation by text at Noble Experiment. Hidden behind a fake wall next to the ladies' room in a casual beer bar called the Neighborhood, patrons push against what looks like a stack of kegs, which swings back to reveal a passageway leading to the speakeasy. Hundreds of gold skulls stud the back wall, lions' paws prop up a marble bar, a Swarovski chandelier twinkles above white leather seats. The bartenders take time to crack ice and tailor drinks—there are eight on the menu, with the assumption that you'll let orders get creative. Just for the bourbon choices and picture of a blinking elk, this may be the coolest place to hang out in San Diego.

The next morning, walk off the fumes at the San Diego Zoo. Miles of winding paths, a world-class menagerie (Bornean sun bears! Jaguar cubs! Dung beetles!) and regular refreshment stalls make rich grounds for low-key tourism. Then, once the novelty of cavorting pandas has dimmed, and the sun starts to ease towards the ocean, head back downtown for another round. ×××

Fresh and local aren't clichés at this suburban gem.

Farmstead Table
71 Union St., Newton
(617-928-6000)

GRILL BEGOTTEN GAINS The Delmonico steak is a surprising standout.

WHEN I TAUGHT legal ethics at Boston College Law School, I began each term by explaining that ethics involves choosing between courses of action that can be informed by equally meritorious but inconsistent goals. Farmstead Table, a delightful new eatery in Newton Centre, reminded me of this phenomenon of competing—but positive—values. Chef/owner Chad Burns has constructed a limited menu of dishes based on fresh, local ingredients, prepared with the skill and consistency he developed working for chef Michael Schlow of Radius. But after three visits, in which I tried almost every item on the menu, I wondered whether this narrow focus would satisfy the constituency of repeat diners essential to a restaurant's success.

Farmstead seats just under 50, counting four at the bar. Its pleasant but prosaic design and decor reinforce the message that food, not ambience, is paramount here. Outstanding organic spelt bread freshly baked on premises arrived with soft butter. A bowl of pumpkin bisque ($8) followed, a marriage of enticing aroma and sweet-spicy flavor with luscious, velvety texture. Despite the small size of the bowl, the richness of the soup made it satisfying. Slices of cured salmon ($11) came draped over a pile of wax beans, their firmness and freshness a delightful counterpoint to the salty silkiness of the salmon. On a second visit, the salmon came with potato chips, presumably because the kitchen ran out of beans. A better expedient would've been to add another slice of fish and forget the garnish. Local yellow beets sliced into a thin carpaccio ($12) arrived under a mountain of arugula moistened with balsamic and garnished with savory goat cheese.

Of the main courses, the Delmonico steak ($28) turned out to be a pleasant surprise, considering the garden-centric menu at this tiny boîte. A well-marbled rib eye grilled to the rare side of medium rare, its succulence and robust flavor was enhanced by a simple marchand de vin red wine reduction that would've charmed the most demanding carnivore. Sea scallops ($28), a special one evening, matched the steak in distinction. Four large lovely specimens, they had been quickly seared to preserve their delicate texture and fresh taste. Spinach and mushrooms made a delicious garnish.

An alleged mushroom risotto ($20) posed a sorry contrast to the steak and scallops. It wasn't a true risotto, which requires arborio or carnaroli rice cooked over a high heat, somewhere between a sauté and a boil, rendering the kernels al dente in a creamy broth. Instead, its texture suggested a steam table. And the mushrooms had an unpleasant, musty flavor—a far cry from the excellent mushrooms accompanying the scallops. But the kitchen bounced back with two first-rate poultry entrées: roast duck breast ($24) and roast chicken ($23). Perfectly cooked with crackling skin and moist flesh, both birds played to rave reviews, although the duck edged out the chicken on the strength of its tiny Brussels sprouts and turnip garnish. The chicken, sadly, suffered from serving meat on a soggy layer of puréed parsnips. There should be a law. But the arrival of a remarkably good crème brûlée ($8) banished my pique. It, and the excellent fresh fruit tart, proved the talent of Farmstead Table's pastry chef.

Another strength of the venue is its beverage selection, which included an array of local beers. For a light supper one night, I enjoyed a terrific Offshore IPA ($5) from Martha's Vineyard with a bacon cheeseburger ($14) on a brioche bun with a side of aioli. Other beers included a 20-ounce bottle of Baby Tree ale ($11) from Westport, a formidable 9-percent brew with a hint of sweetness. Wines included an unfortunately cloying Marqués de Cáceres rosé ($22), and a much better, well-structured Finca La Linda malbec ($24). The restaurant's gentle pricing of its wine and beer considerably elevated its rapport qualité-prix.

The quality of the food, value pricing, and pleasant, enthusiastic waitstaff of Farmstead have already generated a strong following, making reservations mandatory on weekends. Two or three additional menu selections, and changing specials more frequently, will go a long way to sustaining and growing its audience. But already, it's secured its title as one of the premier dining spots in Newton. ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HAVE REGULAR WAXING APPOINTMENTS FOR MY UPPER LIP AND LEGS BUT AM THINKING ABOUT LASER HAIR REMOVAL. WHAT DO YOU THINK?

A: I think it's a great idea! Think of all the time and discomfort you will save over your lifetime by not needing to go in for regular waxing. Laser hair removal works by using light energy to permanently disable the hair follicle so that new hair can not be produced.

The laser light selectively targets hair follicles while leaving other tissue untouched. The most popular areas for women are the upper lip, underarms, bikini area and legs. For men it is usually the back, shoulders and neck. At SkinHealth Centers, we have been providing safe and effective laser hair removal treatments for 14 years. I GOT YOU ABE

Daniel Day-Lewis' performance is worth a pretty penny.

Lincoln ★★★★
Starring Daniel Day-Lewis, Tommy Lee Jones, Sally Field, David Strathairn, Joseph Gordon-Levitt and James Spader. Screenplay by Tony Kushner. Directed by Steven Spielberg. At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.

OUR GREATEST PRESIDENT, played by our Greatest Actor under the guidance of our Greatest Director—the weight of legend has been hanging over Steven Spielberg's Lincoln like a heavy cloud ever since the project was announced.

I know you're probably expecting a solemn history lesson—one of those starchy slogs made mainly for Oscar consideration and screenings in classrooms while bored students catch a nap. Hell, Spielberg tried this kind of thing once before with Amistad, and I was actually shushed in the theater for laughing out loud at the bloated self-importance.

You'll find none of that here.

Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days.

How do you humanize a guy whose face is on money? Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. There's nothing stentorian about his proclamations, either. This Lincoln conceals his sermons within oddball anecdotes and toilet humor.

Yet the whole time his eyes are alight, reading the situation and taking measure of opponents who'll invariably underestimate him. It's one of Day-Lewis' least showy performances, sly and internalized with a gentle temperament that's impossibly endearing. Five minutes into this movie, I wanted Abraham Lincoln to be my new best friend.

Spielberg and screenwriter Tony Kushner wisely avoid the cradle-to-grave structure that plagues most Hollywood biopics. Working in part from Doris Kearns Goodwin's book Team of Rivals, they zero in on the passage on the 13th Amendment and allow Lincoln's biographical details to slowly develop in the background. (I can't tell you how thrilled I was to see a film like this that didn't presume to "solve" the character with a cheapjack, Freudian scene from his childhood before the opening credits.)

For all intents and purposes a congressional procedural, Lincoln begins in the waning days of the Civil War. The film follows our commander-in-chief as he attempts to ram the constitutional amendment banning slavery through a hostile House of Representatives by taking advantage of a few lame ducks who are about to be looking for new jobs.

Humorously acknowledging that his Emancipation Proclamation just might've been slightly illegal, Honest Abe sees that the clock is now ticking on getting abolition passed into actual law, and the thrill of Lincoln is watching this cunning old dog cajole and manipulate an ideologically divided, often bumbling government.

Kushner's screenplay is magnificent, containing grand flights of often off-color oratory. Indeed, the picture is nearly stolen outright by Tommy Lee Jones as die-hard abolitionist Thaddeus Stevens, barking grandiloquent, barn-burning insults from beneath a wig that he himself acknowledges looks ludicrous. (This is what I like to imagine Tommy Lee Jones is like in real life.)

There's also the matter of three cheerfully corrupt proto-lobbyist political fixers played to the hilt by James Spader, John Hawkes and Tim Blake Nelson. The trio is hired by David Strathairn's exasperated Secretary of State William Seward in order to procure votes just barely within ethical means, and John Williams' plaintive, piano-driven score shifts into a jaunty banjo whenever they appear onscreen. As the measure finally comes to a vote, the bruised idealism of Spader's perpetually drunk character receives a glorious payoff.

Spielberg handles the passing of this constitutional amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why I enjoyed it so much.

Of course, there's much more to Lincoln than political farce. We all know how this story ends, and the human cost of the Civil War looms large in the background. Spielberg's off-handed elegance portends future tragedy within the frames, but from moment to moment this picture is loosey-goosey and full of life. Spry and chaotic, Lincoln is one of the best films of the year. ✖✖✖

NAKED TRUTH

Amanda Palmer forges passionate art amid the push and pull of social media.

Amanda Palmer and the Grand Theft Orchestra play Paradise Rock Club Nov. 15–17.

AMANDA PALMER PLAYfully dubs herself an "amateur musician, professional party thrower" on her Twitter page. With 700,000-plus followers, she's perfectly poised for both.

But not everything clicks—online or off—for rock's social butterfly, ironically once "desperate for friends," she says, as an arty outcast at Lexington High. The 36-year-old singer/pianist says that she's been fighting bronchitis, begging off photos with fans as she coughed her way to the bus after a show in Germany. "They were really pissy about it, and it hurt," Palmer says. So did she hole up by herself? No. She took to Twitter to discuss the issue with other artists, friends and fans.

"Twitter has changed the way I work," says Palmer, who's also a passionate blogger and the rare artist who makes an e-mail interview come off as candid and conversational. "It's literally become the focus of my communications with the world, the place I go for information, revolution, comfort, connection, everything."

At the same time, social media has become a double-edged sword since Palmer raised a staggering $1.2 million through a Kickstarter campaign to record and promote her new album, Theatre Is Evil. "It was definitely a great PR boost to have everyone see a concrete example of how powerful my fanbase is," Palmer says. "But it was also a kick in the nuts to be suddenly perceived as a gazillionaire." Palmer outlined on her blog how all the money was spent on the project. "I'm no further ahead at the moment, financially, than I was when I was on a major label," she adds.

Used to operating in grassroots guerilla style, from her stand as a Harvard Square street performer to her punk-cabaret duo the Dresden Dolls, Palmer invited horn and string players to sit in with her new band at various tour stops in exchange for beer, merchandise and hugs.

That's when the Internet—and even The New York Times—lit up with indignation. Palmer dove into the conversation, reconsidered her stance and rearranged her budget to pay those crowd-sourced musicians. At the same time, she says, "Now that my community is more tightly connected, since we can communicate our own stories and truths on a day-to-day basis, the news on the outside is less powerful, less substantial."

In turn, Theatre Is Evil presents the best collection of songs that Palmer has conjured since the Dolls, nodding to such influences as the Cure and Depeche Mode. "[The songs] simply screamed at me that they wanted synths and '80s, '90s production," she says. "So I listened."

The Grand Theft Orchestra, her band of bassist Jherek Bischoff (who also directs the guest players), drummer Michael McQuilken and guitarist Chad Raines, lend robust support on both the record and on stage. For their Nov. 15–17 shows at the Paradise, Palmer plans a tribute to her scene-queen friend, the late Becca Rosenthal, projections of photos from hometown fans and rotating cover songs as well as favorites from both the Dolls and Palmer's solo career.

Her new gems include "The Killing Type," with Palmer's thirst for connection nailed in the line "I would kill to make you feel"; local love letter "Massachusetts Avenue"; and sad piano ballad "The Bed Song," where she traces a couple's lifelong drift across "bigger beds, so they wouldn't have to touch each other," an idea she stole from her husband, fantasy author Neil Gaiman. "I'm much happier giving everyone a mood-soup than cutting out certain songs to make the album more palatable," she says.

Then there's the jaunty "Want It Back" and its video, where stop-motion lyrics creep over Palmer's nude body, reminiscent of art-show performances where she disrobed so fans could draw on her. In another striking video with the Flaming Lips, she splashes naked in a bathtub.

"I'm a provocateur," says Palmer, who once worked as a stripper and a nude model. "I don't want to provoke controversy, anger or hatred. I want to provoke thought, discussion. I want to open doors in people's heads. If I have to use my body to do it, that's actually easier than sitting down and writing a 200-page thesis on the human condition. And, I dare say, louder and more effective." ✖✖✖

FOOLS' GOLD

The Sunshine State of mind

MY WIFE AND I ALMOST moved to California in the 1970s. I was writing a movie, The Money Game, and was totally sucked into the show business life. It's said that all Americans have two businesses, their own and the movies. That's true.

A lot of young people make a beeline for Hollywood, and, whatever your dream, you should go for it. Never look back and say, "I should've tried." If you fail, at least you've made the leap. That said, do a character check before heading for Los Angeles. Ask yourself (and be honest about it): "How tough am I?" When I ask young people this, they all say, "I don't really know." But it's the key question. Because if you're not prepared to be an attack dog, you'll never make it in Tinseltown.

Let me phrase it more gently: You can succeed if you're a complete Machiavelli.

Other parts of California are different. Recently, I spent some time wandering down to L.A. from San Francisco. Bostonians say they love San Francisco and hate Los Angeles. But it's easy to have adventures all over the Golden State. On my ride into the city from the airport, we were stopped in traffic at the foot of Nob Hill. Suddenly there was pounding on the back door of the car, and someone kicking it as well. My driver jumped out to do battle. "Fing One Percent!" the assailant screamed. "Death to the One Percent!" The lunatic fled, shaking his fist. Welcome to San Francisco.

That afternoon I took a long walk, ending up sitting on some steps in Union Square, eating a hot dog from a cart. Next to me sat a young lady in a short red dress. Her hair was garishly dyed red as well, twisted up in points, like a rooster's coxcomb. Her lips seemed a red scar across her face. "I bet your name's Ruby," I said.

"Why the hell would you think that?" she answered.

"Just look at you." She actually smiled at me.

"Another dude from out of town who can never understand." She was right.

I go to Santa Barbara when I want cures for my aches and pains. It's where I seek out my friends Dan and Cynthia. They have a pill or a balm or unguent or strange foods or a series of physical maneuvers to solve most of life's problems. They had a high-colonic phase, a Tibetan phase and a tai-chi phase when they followed elderly Chinese women who said things like, "Only the aged know the true way."

Promised land?

The cars were clean in Santa Barbara, the restaurants great, the flora sweet-smelling. Pressed linens, swishing lawn sprinklers. Nothing seemed to spoil perfection. Dan made a gorgeous breakfast my first morning and served it on their patio surrounded by orange, lemon and eucalyptus trees. He served tiny pancakes made from coconut, rice and almond flour. The milk was almond as well. "We try to eliminate all sugar from our lives. Sugar is the evil one." Dan had designed a ceramic crock for water. It was in the shape of a crocodile. "We get our water from Japan," he said, "It's ionized, alkanized aqua. You want to be sure to get rid of all acidity." They left me alone to eat my pancakes while they rushed off to water aerobics, the sand in their hourglass indicating that it was time to exercise.

On my way to L.A., I stopped at a Wendy's and had a double cheeseburger with fries and—the best thing I had tasted in years—a big fat coffee Frosty.

When I first spent time in the City of Angels, I thought it was heaven. I watched the Alvin Ailey dancers cavort in the pool of my hotel; I said hello to Cary Grant and Burt Lancaster; I jogged next to Art Garfunkel and treadmilled alongside Tom Selleck. They all smiled "hello," and none were accompanied by an entourage.

Now heading into the city, I was tied up for 45 minutes on the freeway, only a few miles from my hotel. "Every day," my driver said, "I say to myself, 'I either shoot myself, or move to Wyoming tomorrow.' What's their license plate, 'Live Free or Die'?"

"That's New Hampshire," I told him.

"Whatever," he answered. "I'm an actor, I do stand-up, I wait sushi tables, noodle joints, la vida loca, know what I'm saying?"

I must've said, "I hear you," a thousand times. This was the refrain. Everyone hated their lives. You couldn't move in traffic. The hot restaurants told you, "Five pm for dinner, yes, or 9:30 yes, all else... no." People sounded like Yogi Berra, "Nobody can make a movie anymore, and goddamn Russians are everywhere. Their women wear sable when it's 90 degrees. Their skirts don't cover the tush. The Arabs own the Bel Air and the Beverly Hills, and nobody can make a movie."

Every friend I saw in L.A. lamented the state of the state, the entitlements, the logistics. "How did it come to this?" they asked.

One old friend took me to the Los Angeles County Museum to see a retrospective on Ken Price, the best ceramic colorist in America. We got to the museum, parked at a meter and were told at the entrance, "We're closed on Wednesdays." My friend actually cried in frustration. "Damn it to hell," he said. "The fing state! Nothing works."

When I arrived in Boston at midnight I kissed my fingers and touched the baggage carousel. There's no place like home. ×××

FEELING LUCKY

The C's will heat things up this winter.

A YEAR AGO, THE BUILDUP to basketball season wasn't about winning or losing, it was about whether teams would be playing at all. With the work stoppage, we eventually ended up with a shortened season, which had people speculating on how that would help or hurt the aging Boston Celtics.

In truth, the season was over for the Green before it started. The NBA's revised schedule forced more back-to-back-to-back games than the Celtics' aging veterans care to remember, so the team was fighting an uphill battle from Day 1. People like to say that pro basketball is a young man's game. That adage was never more true than last year, as we saw the dynamic Miami Heat and the still wet-behind-the-ears Oklahoma City Thunder battle in the NBA Finals.

Luckily for the NBA, it's the NHL that's currently in the unenviable position of being closed for business, and now for the second straight year, TD Garden athletes are sitting at home, or playing overseas, and in the process damaging the paychecks and bottom lines of West End employees and businesses. Amazingly, just one season after a damaging labor dispute, the NBA is back to looking good (at least in comparison).

As the 2012-13 season tips off, it's great to be talking about basketball instead of mediation, and with this year's Celtics team there's a whole lot to discuss. It's hard to believe that since 2007—the initial year of the Big Three II—there are only three guys from that championship team who remain on the roster. A couple years ago, I thought the team was operating on borrowed time, but here we are, in year six of the supposed three-year project, and Paul Pierce (35) and Kevin Garnett (36) are still key components of a championship contender.

While they may be past their prime, both men are among the top three players the Celtics will be counting on this winter. Whether they're number one or two in the hierarchy is subject to debate, but who's the leader is no longer in question. The centerpiece of this incredible reclamation project is point man Rajon Rondo.

All you need to know about how the Celtics feel about their enigmatic guard is that Ray

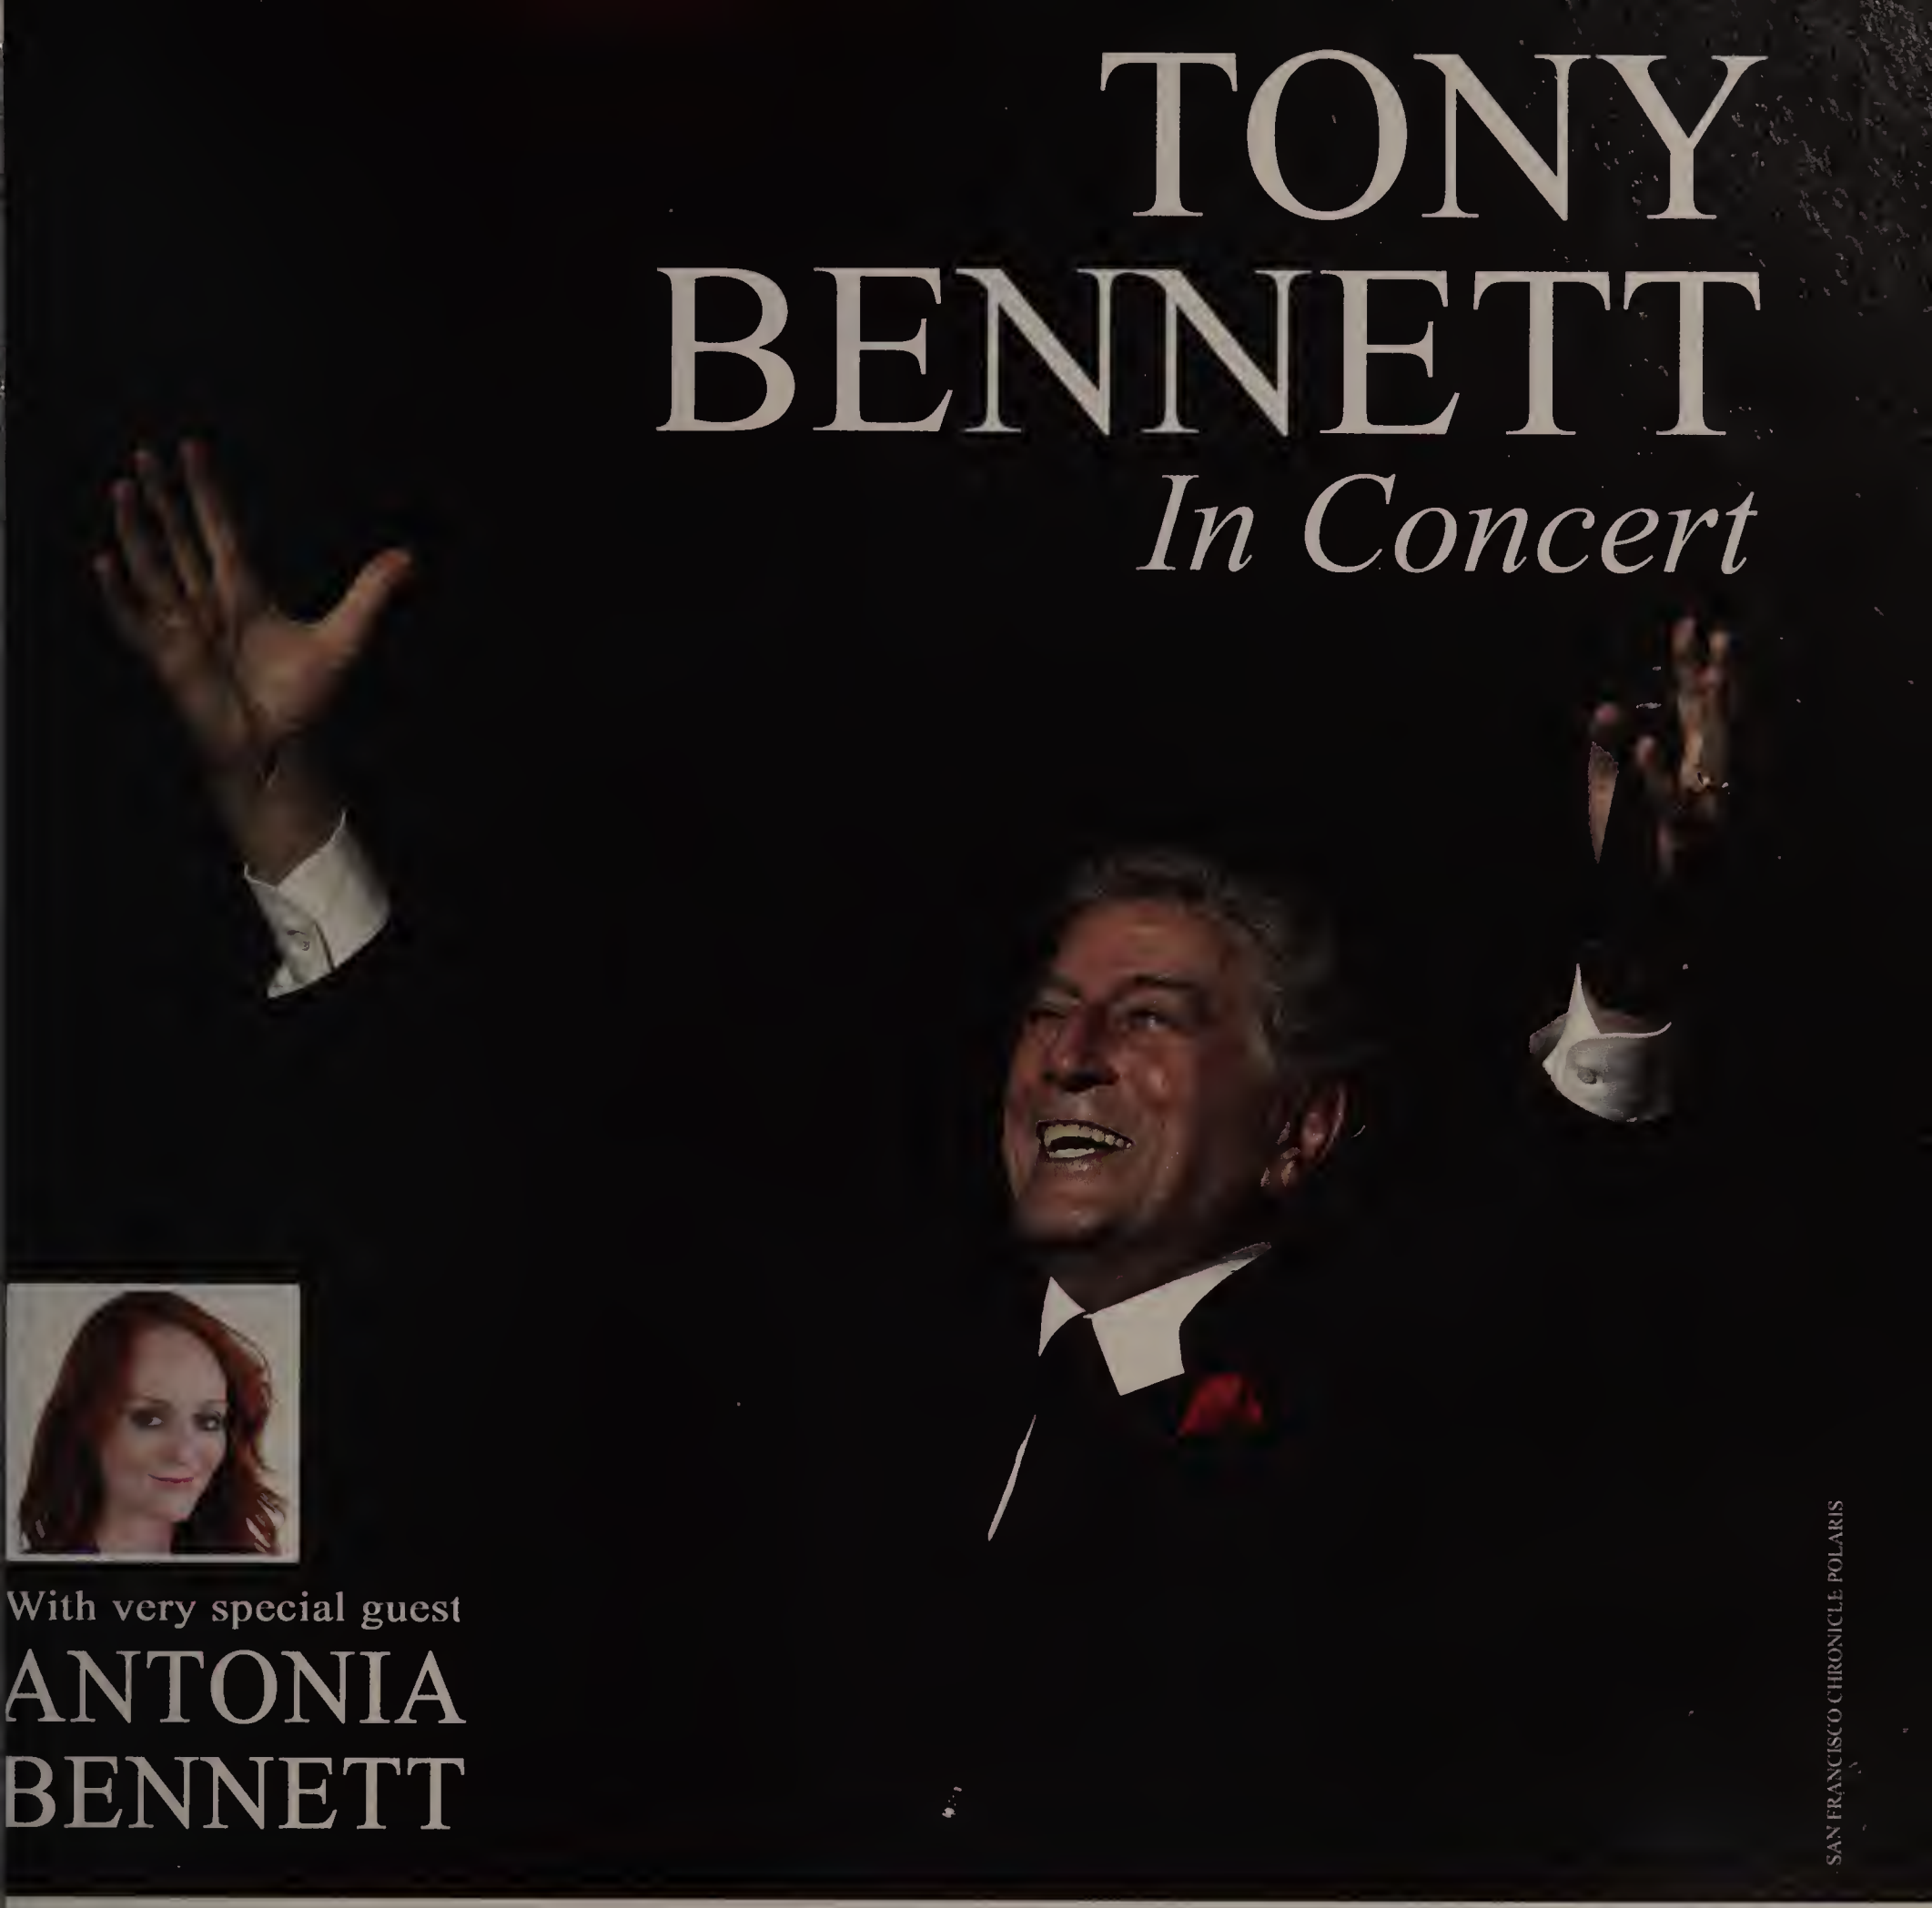
Brian Babineau/NBAE via Getty Images

Here we are, in year six of the supposed three-year project, and Pierce and Garnett are still key components of a championship contender.

Allen—probably the nicest Celtic in history not named Bob Cousy—left town for less money. Rondo didn't want Allen around, and now Allen plays for Miami. You do the math.

The man at the head of the organization has been flexing his powers, as well. This was a tremendous off-season for Danny Ainge. When experts were clamoring for him to blow the team up and start over, Ainge wouldn't have any of it. He went out and fixed the Celtics' disappointing bench, which was toothless in the Eastern Conference Finals. The acquisition of veteran sharpshooter Jason Terry was one of Ainge's greatest moves. Terry is a proven, veteran leader who, unlike Allen, doesn't care if he's starting or not.

In addition, the influx of two first-round draft picks—Ohio State's Jared Sullinger and Syracuse's Fab Melo—will help this season, as will the acquisition of Courtney Lee and the return of a healthy Jeff Green. The re-signing of Brandon Bass, a sweet shooting, hard-nosed forward, brings stability to the starting lineup. Bass can score in bunches and hold his own on defense.



Again, bravo to Ainge for his resiliency when a lot of us—OK, me, I can admit it—thought it was time to trade everybody, even Rondo. But with the establishment of this new Big Three, it looks like the Celtics are headed toward a very good year and maybe a real run at banner No. 18. They have to contend with the Heat, Pacers and Nets in the East. Even the Bulls remain a menace, with or without Derrick Rose. Out West, the Lakers, Thunder and Spurs are all built for a championship. The Celtics belong in that mix, though, and when you think of how things could've gone, that's incredible.

Of course, we have to be realistic. The Miami Heat, led by King LeBron James, are the team to beat. Can the Celtics handle them in June? Maybe. Maybe not. But I will say this: I can't wait to watch it all develop. The C's are undoubtedly exciting, and, right now, that's enough. ✖✖✖

CROSSFIT TO BEAR

Try my excellent customized workout regimen.

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

TIRED OF RUNNING, LIFTING weights and eating sensibly? You should be, because conventional workouts only scratch the surface of what your body can do. If you want to maximize the return on your effort, you need to drop the zombie routine and try my new fitness regimen, P80Y-Fit. Never before has a workout incorporated so many unconventional ideas to such wonderful effect. I've unlocked the body's potential, and from now on all other forms of exercise will be a waste of time.

My system is loosely related to P90X, but you only do the P part for 80 days, which leaves you 10 days to CrossFit, thus stacking your gains. The program is gaining a celebrity following, most notably a politician you may have heard of. When this esteemed legislator gets in the shower, the water sounds like BBs bouncing off cold rolled steel. Ping! Ping! Ping! That's what happens when you have .02 percent body fat. I'm not supposed to say who it is, but it's Nancy Pelosi.

If you want to get the detailed workout, you'll need to buy my P80Y-Fit package, which is available online. (For silly legal reasons, delivery will require a Mexican P.O. box.) But I'll give you some highlights right now, just to whet your appetite for the workout of your life.

▶ Day 1, we begin with the adductor machine. Pick it up. Carry it to the nearest freeway overpass, and throw it onto a moving flatbed truck. Get the truck's license plate because you'll need that later. Go in the back door of your gym, and say you saw a guy with a flatbed truck steal the adductor machine. Later, you'll fight this truck driver in prison, thus completing your workout. But that's not 'til Day 73. For now, just help file the police report. Then eat the police report. Now you're not hungry because you've fiber-loaded some paleo-trition.

▶ Day 2, post a Facebook photo of yourself doing your P80Y-Fit workout. You should be making the ugliest face possible, so that everyone knows how serious you are about shredding your metabolism and increasing your delts with max reps of muscle shock. When the pic is taken, you'll be winning a tug-of-war against a team of oxen, because you're in Day 2 of P80Y-Fit, and you're already as strong as five Neanderthals. Make this your profile photo, too, or we'll kick you out of the cul—I mean, program.

▶ Day 3 is all about muscle confusion. Swim to Prince Edward Island, and find some bivalves. Blindfold them, and throw them in a van. Drive in circles, and let them out in the woods. Result: total mussel confusion. Now that you've learned about homophones, it's time for your workout, which consists of 15 jumping jacks. Your muscles will be like, "What, that's it?" Muscle confusion attained. Congratulations, you're now as strong as six ostriches.

▶ Day 4 you enter my proprietary, winner-take-all cross-blast race with other area P80Y-Fit'ers. It's called Tough Death Hike Mortal Challenge, and it's a lot of fun for everyone. First you climb a tall rope wall and grab a flag at the top. (Other teams will try to steal this flag, as will the feral dogs I've stationed at the top of the wall.) Slide down the other side onto the electrified barbed-wire tightrope, which you have to cross in order to reach the Hallway Where You Get Kicked by Horses. After a quick swim through the quicksand and blasting a tunnel through a granite mountain, you'll only have to get past the riot police to claim your spot on the podium. The winner receives a stern reprimand from a German prostitute.

▶ On Day 5 you go for a run while holding an unlikely object above your head. This can be an old tire, but we prefer it to be a cage full of skunks. The cage is wired with a sensitive altimeter—if you drop it below shoulder-height, an alarm will sound and scare the skunks. Motivation can't always come from within.

Obviously, you shouldn't attempt this exercise inside the gym. You should go find a busy sidewalk and do it there, so that the maximum number of passersby can see what you're up to and thus question the validity of their own workout routines. Due to the popularity of my program, many of the other people on the sidewalk will be fellow P80Y-Fit participants, so try to respect their workouts and stay out of the way if you encounter someone dragging a crate of onions behind a recumbent bicycle. You'll get there yourself on Day 19.

So what happens when you complete the program? Well, I'm already working on P80Y-Fit Pro, which will include guano smoothies and Philates, a combination of pilates and light sparring with Dr. Phil. The formula came to me during a séance with Jack LaLanne. Now let's go get our ab workout by laughing at the people on the elliptical machines. ✖✖✖

“At every concert, there’s someone who’s never heard what you’re about to play.”

Soroff On JOSHUA WEILERSTEIN

The prodigy assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic tells us about talent, travel and chamber music trios.

CONDUCTOR JOSHUA WEILERSTEIN, 24, WAS BORN AND RAISED in Boston, part of a famously musical clan that includes his parents and sister (who form the Weilerstein Trio). A graduate of New England Conservatory, he has appeared as a violin soloist with orchestras around the world and served as the concertmaster of Discovery Ensemble. After winning the 2009 Malko Competition for Young Conductors in Copenhagen, Denmark, he made his conducting debut with the Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra. In 2011, he was named as one of two assistant conductors of the New York Philharmonic. He lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Is Boston the best musical city in America?
Joshua Weilerstein: It's definitely one of them. When you think about how many orchestral ensembles there are here—the BSO, BPO, Discovery Ensemble, A Far Cry, NEC's ensembles—and the incredible chamber music, you could easily go to a fantastic and inspiring concert every single night.

Why didn't you join the Weilerstein trio?
There isn't a lot of music written for two violins, cello and piano, and though my dad and I both play viola, we don't have time to do that kind of thing all the time.

Who's the most talented member of the clan?
My sister can pick out each note in a foghorn, my dad can remember just about anything he's ever played, and my mom is one of the most naturally musical people I've ever met, so I really can't say.

Who'll be the BSO's next artistic director?
I wish I knew! I think there are a lot of great options out there, and I hope whoever they get continues the really inventive and creative programming that James Levine did, while also reaching out into the community to create new audiences.

Favorite conductor to watch?
Living? Riccardo Chailly, Gustavo Dudamel, Alan Gilbert. Dead? Carlos Kleiber and Leonard Bernstein.

Best venue you've ever played?
In all honesty, Jordan Hall in Boston. To play chamber music there is incomparable.

Best venue you've ever conducted?
Symphony Hall in Boston or the Konserthuset in Stockholm.

Difference between playing and conducting?
When I'm conducting, there's nothing I can do to make a sound, besides breathing heavily and grunting. With the violin, I'm fully responsible physically, mentally and technically for making the sound. With conducting, the responsibilities are the same, but the method of dealing with them is different.

Most unconventional use for a bow?
There have been more than a few sword fights at rehearsals.

And baton?
It's a great backscratcher.

How much did your parents push you?
Not at all. I didn't even want to be a violinist or a musician until I was 15. My parents were totally cool with that, and when I decided I wanted to pursue music, all they said was that now I needed to practice a lot more.

If your dad was a taxi driver, and your mom was a waitress, what would you be?
Probably what I was going to be before I turned to music: a sportswriter. I had a borderline unhealthy obsession with sports as a kid.

What are your musical guilty pleasures?
I don't know why, but I'm a huge fan of System of a Down. I usually hate that kind of music.

Favorite composer of all time?
Mahler, Shostakovich and Beethoven consistently move me more than anyone else.

Violinist you most admire?
Living? Christian Tetzlaff. Dead? David Oistrakh.

Artist you were most awestruck to play with?
Simon Rattle, for sure, but being in the same tiny rehearsal room while Bryn Terfel was singing Tosca was a life-altering experience.

Most awkward moment onstage?
My bridge [the little piece that holds up all of the strings] snapped off during a performance of Peter and the Wolf in Guatemala for about a thousand kids. They were pretty freaked out because it makes an unbelievably loud noise.

Any self-consciousness performing?
I have a fear of falling off the podium. I'm sure it'll happen at some point because I'm ridiculously clumsy.

Are conductors egomaniacal control freaks?
Some are, but it's a trend that's changing for the better. There are very few egomaniacal, tyrannical conductors who can get anywhere in the musical world anymore. The focus is on collaboration and good relationships.

Favorite foreign cities?
I love Tel Aviv, Amsterdam and Copenhagen.

Is El Sistema the cure to the world's ills?
Using music as a social program is a brilliant idea. It should absolutely be replicated around the world.

Does music soothe the savage beast?
There's definitely some classical music—Shostakovich comes to mind—that is by no means soothing.

Best seduction music?
Depends on what you're into, but Piazzolla, "Sunrise" from Ravel's Daphnis et Chloé or Márquez's Danzon No. 2 come to mind.

Instrument you enjoy the most besides violin?
Cello and French horn.

Tip for kids aspiring to a classical music career?
Don't be discouraged. Don't be cynical. Be the most inspiring musician you can be, and remember that at every concert, there's someone who's never heard what you're about to play. ×××

MANY THANKS

FOR CELEBRITY CHEF
TONY MAWS,
HOLIDAY CHEER
MEANS MORE THAN A FANCY BIRD.

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

WE ALL ADMIRE PEOPLE WHO VOLUNTEER AT SOUP KITCHENS AND HOMELESS SHELTERS ON THANKSGIVING, THE SELFLESS SOULS WHO GIVE BACK TO THEIR FELLOW MAN ON A HOLIDAY THAT, AFTER ALL, IS ABOUT EXPRESSING GRATITUDE. BUT MOST OF US, OF COURSE, AREN'T LIKE THAT. WE WANT TO BE SURROUNDED BY FAMILY AND FRIENDS, SITTING IN FRONT OF A SPREAD BEFITTING AUGUSTUS GLOOP, WATCHING A ROARING FIRE AND A TV BIG ENOUGH TO SHOW THE HAIR FOLLICLES ON THE QUARTERBACK'S THROWING ARM.

THAT'S ONE OF THE QUALITIES THAT MAKES TONY MAWS, CHEF/OWNER OF CRAIGIE ON MAIN,
SO UNUSUAL. TRUE, HE'S A JAMES BEARD AWARD–WINNING CHEF.
AND, TRUE, HIS RESTAURANT IS BEAUTIFULLY EQUIPPED FOR COOKING FOR A LARGE GATHERING.
BUT NOT EVERY CHEF THINKS TO SERVE, NOT ONLY FRIENDS AND FAMILY,
BUT A CROWD OF LARGE HUNGRY MEN
WHO'RE STUCK AT WORK ON THE HOLIDAY—
MEN WHO FILL THE POPULAR ROLE OF HEROES.

For the past four years, Maws, his family, friends and staff have delivered a full Thanksgiving dinner, with all the trimmings, to the members of Engine Company Two at the Lafayette Square Fire House. "I don't know if we're a big small city or a small big town, but there's a sense of community in Cambridge," says Maws. It's that sense of connectedness that gave root to this holiday tradition.

Maws, a Newton native, trained as a chef under Chris Schlesinger at the East Coast Grill. In 2002, he opened his first restaurant, Craigie Street Bistrot, just outside of Harvard Square. Housed in a cozy subterranean room in an upscale part of 02138, the place was instantly mobbed, despite the tucked-away location and paucity of public parking. By 2005, Maws had been anointed "One of America's 10 Best New Chefs" by Food and Wine magazine. By 2008 (when the same magazine elevated him to its "New Chefs Hall of Fame"), he'd outgrown the location. He found a larger space on Main Street in Central Square, a few hundred yards from the 1894 fire station on Mass. Ave.

"We're traditionally closed on Thanksgiving," says Maws, "and I host my own celebration in the restaurant because it's bigger than my house. So I'm looking across the street, almost directly at the fire station.... They work their asses off, and they're sitting in the firehouse on a day when most people are relaxing at home. I figured they could probably use a good, homecooked meal."

So he called across the street and offered to bring them Thanksgiving dinner. He's been doing it ever since.

"We walk it over to them, deliver it, and then go back to the restaurant. Some of the guys in the kitchen kick in. My wife takes a bunch of stuff over. They've got the football game on; we've got the football game on. I'm not looking for anything out of it. The high-five's and the expressions on their faces are all we need."

Captain Frederick Ikels of the Cambridge Fire Department recalls the first time he got the call, asking if they could accept Maws' generosity.

"I was a little taken aback by what a nice gesture it was. We accepted, because the guys on duty are away from their families, and it's a fairly busy house. The guys were extremely happy. Craigie on Main is one of the best restaurants in the area, and for them to deliver a meal to our guys is awesome."

Not that the arrangement isn't mutually beneficial.

"We've set off our alarms," Maws admits sheepishly. "It's a big open kitchen, so one too many steaks can set the smoke detectors off, and they've been over to make sure everything's OK." (Probably not a bad situation for a restaurant with a name that combines two streets that neither intersect nor, in fact, are anywhere near each other.)

Ikels echoes Maws' sentiments, saying, "Working in that neighborhood, we really get to know the business owners, but it's especially great to build that kind of relationship with them."

"It's nice to know they know we're here," jokes Maws, whose regard for firemen is genuine. "I understand their devotion. My cousin is a fireman in Brookline, and my friend is one in Somerville. My cousin always asks why I don't bring food to him."

As for the menu, Maws keeps it simple: turkey (which he brines), stuffing (which he never makes the same way twice), mashed potatoes (with more butter than most cardiologists would recommend), gravy, cranberry sauce, a roasted seasonal vegetable and "lots of pies."

"We'd bring 'em beer and wine, too," Maws adds, "but they can't drink on the job."

"I wish we could do something of equal value for them," counters Ikels, although he points out: "People come by the fire house asking for restaurant recommendations all the time, and I can assure you, Craigie on Main is at the top of our list."

When you sit down at the table this holiday, then, offer your own toast in appreciation of well-fed firefighters. Because, when the turkey's carved and the wine's been drained, there's always a chance you forgot to turn off the oven.

KITCHEN SHRINK

FOOD WRITER/PSYCHOLOGIST SCOTT HAAS DISHES ON HIS NEW BOOK, BACK OF THE HOUSE: THE SECRET LIFE OF A RESTAURANT (FEBRUARY 2013, BERKLEY TRADE), ABOUT HIS 18 MONTHS INSIDE THE KITCHEN OF CRAIGIE ON MAIN.

SARAH HAGMAN

AS A PSYCHOLOGIST, WHAT DRAWS YOU TO CHEFS?

Chefs bring us the goods: mother's milk, crushes, unrequited love, first girlfriends or boyfriends, marriages, fleeting affairs and feeding the kids. Chefs satisfy hunger. It's so profound and amazing, really. You open a door, you sit down feeling empty, you leave feeling full. It's all about love.

WHY LOOK AT A RESTAURANT AND ITS STAFF THROUGH THAT LENS?

No other profession feeds us, and no other profession than psychology is better suited to figuring out why these characters, who become chefs, sacrifice every possible relationship outside a restaurant to feed groups of strangers night after night instead.

IN WHAT WAYS DO YOU THINK A CHEF'S DISHES REFLECT HIS OR HER PERSONALITY?

Whether it's a chef like Escoffier choosing to cook by the numbers or a chef whose creativity is his M.O. like Maws, every successful, memorable chef develops a vocabulary that is a visceral expression of their deepest, darkest fears, secrets and desires. The chef who decides to play the game by the long established rules is a conformist who eschews risk. But chefs like Maws are risk takers. They are the culinary equivalent of bungee jumpers. A traditional sauce tells you the dude is a square or at least covert. But a whacky uni-pig heart dish, which you might find at Craigie, is the chef's way of saying he's unpredictable, a Christopher Walken at the stove.

HOW IS THE ATMOSPHERE IN CRAIGIE ON MAIN DIFFERENT FROM OTHER RESTAURANTS YOU'VE BEEN TO?

I have never been in a place quite like it. Not ever. Not in Japan, Italy, New York City or the Planet Xenon. At Craigie, the chef is kind of like a free-style rapper or an old-school Frank Zappa or Miles when he was recording in Hoboken. Improvisation, man, improvisation. And in order to do that? We're talking about trust. It's a high-wire act: The rules last night don't apply to tonight's menu.

WHAT DO YOU FEEL WAS THE BEST THING ABOUT THE WHOLE EXPERIENCE?

It was like being part of a family. I was able to get to know a great chef on the cusp of world fame. Maws opened up, he trusted me. He showed love and respect and demanded it of me in return.

WAS THERE ANYTHING UNEXPECTED ABOUT IT?

Not really. I've been in the world's best kitchens. Wait, I know: very cool to find one in Cambridge.

TONY'S HOLIDAY RECIPES

TURKEY BRINE

- 8 ½ cups of water
- ½ cup kosher salt
- 1 tablespoon kombu
- 2 teaspoons coriander seeds
- 2 teaspoons fennel seeds
- 1 teaspoon dried thyme
- 1 teaspoon chili flakes
- 2 allspice berries
- 2 juniper berries
- 2 cloves

1 Mix ingredients together to make about 1⅓ gallons of brine for every 12–14 pound turkey.

2 Fully submerge the turkey in the brine.

3 Let sit for 12 hours.

BRUSSELS SPROUTS

- ½ pound of Brussels sprouts
- 2 tablespoons of duck fat
- salt and pepper

1 Heat a pan on high and preheat oven to 425 degrees.

2 Cover bottom of pan with ¼ inch of duck fat.

3 Cut the Brussels sprouts in half and season with salt and freshly cracked pepper. Add to the fat.

4 Toss sprouts in the pan to evenly coat them with the fat.

5 Place in oven and roast until tender and well caramelized.

MASHED POTATOES

- 5 Yukon Gold potatoes
- 1 pound butter
- 2 cups whole milk
- 4 sprigs of thyme
- 4 garlic cloves
- kosher salt
- black pepper

1 Wash potatoes and place in a large pot. Cover with 2 inches of water.

2 Liberally salt the water, then add 2 garlic cloves and 2 sprigs of thyme.

3 Boil until tender.

4 While the potatoes are cooking, heat the whole milk with 2 garlic cloves and 2 sprigs of thyme.

5 Set aside.

6 Drain the water from the pot and place the potatoes in a mixer with a paddle attachment.

7 On low speed, break up the potatoes while gradually mixing in the butter in 4 waves.

8 Remove garlic cloves and thyme, and pour in milk until you reach your desired consistency.

9 Add salt and freshly cracked pepper.

SWEETENED POACHED CRANBERRIES

- 3½ cups orange juice
- 2 cups cranberries
- 1¼ cups honey
- 1 cup Port wine
- ½ cup Demerara sugar
- 2 lime zests
- 1 orange zest
- 1 star anise
- 1 cinnamon stick
- allspice
- salt

1 Combine all ingredients except the cranberries. Bring to a boil.

2 Poach cranberries in small batches. Remove them from the liquid after they've popped.

3 Let the liquid reduce until there's just enough to cover the cranberries. Adjust sweetness if necessary.

4 Pour over cranberries.

5 Let cool to room temperature, then refrigerate.

ORIGINALLY CRAFTED FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Named after the Holiday star, Stella Artois was first brewed as a holiday beer as a gift to the people of Leuven, Belgium. A golden lager in contrast to the popular dark ales of the time, its brilliant amber color illuminated holiday celebrations for generations thereafter. "Artois" acknowledges Sebastian Artois, the master brewer and owner of the brewery.

HAVE A HAIR BALL

GREEN'S BACK

THE GHOST OF BORIS Karloff can rest easy. Matt August's direction of Dr. Seuss' How the Grinch Stole Christmas! The Musical hits all the expected tropes: green hair, pet labor, harmonic singing, grand larceny. And, of course, the immortal lyrics to "You're a Mean One, Mr. Grinch."

In this version of the Dickensian tale of grouchiness and redemption, Max the dog narrates his master's devious plan to thwart the holiday. In the process, he helps the misanthropic creature realize that Christmas doesn't come from a store, but maybe, perhaps means a little bit more.

There Will Be Blood

New Hickory Our seventh president, Andrew Jackson, was a controversial figure. The guy on the $20 bill shot men in duels, fought in the Battle of New Orleans and ethnically cleansed Native Americans east of the Mississippi. Now his story gets the emo-rock treatment it so richly deserves. Two-time Tony-nominated director Alex Timbers and his show Bloody Bloody Andrew Jackson bring this eventful life to the stage with legions of attitude and a complementing power-chord–pumping score. Jacksonian Democrats and Republicans alike can watch in judgment at the Calderwood Pavilion through Nov. 17.

Reel Love

Drawn Away Live action, claymation, animation—writer/director Terence Nance employs it all as he plays star and storyteller in his feature, An Oversimplification of Her Beauty. In a strange hybrid of fact and fiction, Nance documents his relationship with women, obsessing over the moment he was stood up by costar and real-life ex-girlfriend Namik Minter. Nance's heartache over the one that got away culminates in many a ceiling-staring scene, and the multilayered, disjointed plot mirrors the couple's failed relationship. Drift through a director's heartbreak when An Oversimplification of Her Beauty hits UMass Boston on Nov. 15. Jennifer Jackson

Reviews by Sean Burns

Alex Cross ★ Turns out if you take Tyler Perry out of a dress, he's got nothing. The self-made star of Madea's bizarre drag phenomenon makes a bid for mainstream fame by taking over for Morgan Freeman in this reboot of the Seven-lite franchise based on James Patterson's best-selling novels. As the titular sage detective/psychologist, Perry wanders around crime scenes mumbling in a monotone and looking uncomfortable while everybody talks about what a genius he is. Good to know, since we don't see Cross do anything resembling detective work. He and braying jackass partner Tommy Kane (Edward Burns) get stuck with a bunch of grisly homicides, which lands them in the crosshairs of Matthew Fox's shirtless psycho. (If there's a worse performance this year than the bug-eyed, screeching Fox, I haven't seen it.) It's all vaguely nasty and blisteringly stupid, with a great deal of plot holes, torture and dull forensics. In short, this is like paying 10 bucks to see every CBS procedural that I already don't bother to watch at home. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (At West Newton and the suburbs.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Beasts of the Southern Wild ★★★★ This Sundance sensation is one of the most poignant things I've ever seen. A portrait of a poor New Orleans community bracing for Hurricane Katrina, Beasts of the Southern Wild is so infused with fanciful flourishes that most of the time it feels like Days of Heaven by way of The Road Warrior. Young Quvenzhané Wallis stars as six-year-old Hushpuppy, who lives with her alcoholic father (Dwight Henry) in a junkyard community called the Bathtub. Director Benh Zeitlin drops us into this world with no explanation, and it may take a while to adjust to the harsh environment and oddball speech patterns. Oh, and there are also recently unfrozen, prehistoric aurochs roaming through the proceedings. It's a purposefully abstract piece, never a movie about "poverty" or "Katrina," but about something much harder to pin down. Eventually, it all comes down to Hushpuppy's indomitable spirit and a final shot that sends you soaring out of the theater. (At West Newton.)

Cloud Atlas ★★ ½ Some people call it the best movie of the year; others say it's the worst. The truth is that Cloud Atlas feels like both at the same time. Directed by Wachowski siblings Lana and Andy, splitting duties with Run Lola Run's Tom Tykwer, this insanely ambitious film explodes David Mitchell's carefully constructed nesting-doll stories into a single, centuries-spanning continuum where past, present and future overlap, as do recurring themes of enslavement and escape. Tom Hanks and the rest of the all-star cast keep popping up, playing different (but sometimes oddly similar) characters in each disparate tale, often wearing elaborate prosthetic makeup that ranges from the sublime to the ridiculous—a turn of phrase that sums up Cloud Atlas in a nutshell. A lot of the time, this feels like D.W. Griffith's Intolerance by way of Zardoz. Yet the kitsch factor weirdly keeps with the picture's ardent, disarming sincerity. There's not a cynical moment in these three hours, and the actors throw themselves into their roles with wild, foolhardy abandon. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Details ★ Tobey Maguire stars as a philandering husband in this ghastly sophomore effort from writer/director Jacob Aaron Estes, who helmed the promising Mean Creek back in 2004 and apparently has done nothing since, besides watch American Beauty over and over again. Yes folks, it's another one of those movies about the dysfunctional secrets lurking just beneath the manicured lawns of suburbia. What a novel concept. Frustrated with his marriage to his shrewish wife (Elizabeth Banks), Maguire's character blunders his way through a blotto hookup with his med-school buddy (Kerry Washington) before accidentally knocking up the creepy cat lady next door (Laura Linney, uncharacteristically awful). He also donates one of his kidneys to a kindly black pal played by Dennis Haysbert, so he can't be all bad? Apparently not content with shrill misogyny, The Details also gets pretty damn racist in the final stretch, mustering up a warmed-over Woody Allen murder plot with implications so offensive, I'm frankly shocked that such a respectable cast took part in this swill. (At West Newton.)

End of Watch ★ ½ Training Day screenwriter David Ayer's third directorial effort unfortunately attempts to yoke his hard-boiled cop routine to that ever-wearying found-footage craze. The gimmick here is that beat cop Brian Taylor (Jake Gyllenhaal) is taking a night class in documentary filmmaking, so he and partner Mike Zavala (Michael Peña) wear buttonhole video cameras in their uniform pockets, and the whole movie jerks around in a fish-eyed, low resolution blur. Trying to follow the action made me so nauseated, I had to take a break halfway through and walk around the lobby just to keep from throwing up. Gyllenhaal and Peña have a relaxed rapport behind the wheel of a squad car, even if the baby-faced Gyllenhaal is never remotely credible as a steroidal knucklehead. Grandiose cartel baddies carry gold-plated AK-47s, conveniently videotaping their crimes for no other reason than that the movie needs us to see them. Improbable set-pieces and overscaled shoot-outs ensue, with the jagged YouTube aesthetic only underlining the phoniness of all these Hollywood clichés. (In the suburbs.)

Flight ★★ The trouble with movies about addiction is that they all tend to be the same. There are only so many ways to run through the standard parabola of denial, rock-bottom, recovery and relapse before it starts to feel like déjà vu all over again. Denzel Washington stars as hotshot pilot Whip Whitaker, who responds to a fluke mechanical failure by inverting the plane in a daredevil move and saving the lives of almost a hundred passengers. Only catch is that he was smashed. It's a tremendous scene, but unfortunately the rest of this picture's bloated 139-minute running time follows Whitaker at his father's farmhouse, attempting to kick booze and drugs before a federal hearing that could land him in prison. He climbs on the wagon; he falls off the wagon. He climbs on the wagon again, and then guess what happens next? He self-destructs over and over until it's eventually time for everybody to recite "The Serenity Prayer," so the movie can finally end. Rinse, wash and repeat. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Looper ★★★ Writer/director Rian Johnson's nifty, time-bending thriller stars Bruce Willis as the future Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The latter plays a hit man for the mob, knocking off targets beamed back to 2044 from 30 years hence. Except for one fateful day when he's supposed to shoot... himself? Johnson's intriguingly lo-fi vision of the future is full of vintage blunderbusses, designer drugs and a tricky maze of paradoxical timelines. Jeff Daniels drops by for a hilarious supporting turn as a bored gangster from the future, but the main event is Gordon-Levitt's uncanny Willis impersonation. He's got the squint and the sneer down pat, making his distracting prosthetic nose somewhat unnecessary. Johnson, who helmed the terrific art-house oddity Brick and the significantly less charming Brothers Bloom, tries to keep the sci-fi elements grounded with rural farmhouses and workaday diners. He bites off a bit more than he can chew, but kudos to Willis for tweaking his own iconography and heading into waters much darker than initially expected. A clever, crafty little picture. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Man With the Iron Fists ★★ ½ RZA's silly homage to VHS-era chop-socky pictures distinguishes itself from the recent glut of grindhouse tributes simply by virtue of sincerity. Unlike when Quentin Tarantino, or his legion of imitators, attempts to make a bad movie on purpose, there's no condescension here. The Wu-Tang Clan member is hopelessly out of his league when it comes to directing, but he'll be damned if he isn't going to make an epic throwback to the Shaw Brothers' double-feature fare—even giving himself the title role. Reportedly whittled down from a four-hour first cut, The Man With the Iron Fists is a jumbled hodgepodge of too many characters with conflicting motivations colliding in a one-horse town called Jungle Village. RZA's awkward narration attempts to smooth the gaps, but what's fun is his everything-but-the-kitchen-sink playfulness. The picture is outright stolen by Russell Crowe, who delightfully slums as a drunken Englishman with a taste for prostitutes and sex toys. The film is a mess, but always amusing. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Moonrise Kingdom ★★★★ Director Wes Anderson's dollhouse sets and Peanuts costumes can sometimes distract from the pathos and heartbreak lurking beneath the surface of his twee tales of damaged men who refuse to grow up. While Moonrise Kingdom is Anderson's most meticulously designed picture, it's also his most emotionally accessible. Riffing on the young-lovers-on-the-lam genre (with plenty of shout-outs to Badlands and Pierrot Le Fou), the film finds star-crossed 12-year-olds running away from home on the fictional New England island of New Penzance during the summer of 1965. The adults in pursuit are a classically broken bunch, with Edward Norton as a scoutmaster out of his league, Bill Murray as a cuckold in denial and the pitch-perfect Bruce Willis as a heartbroken cop called "the sad dumb policeman" behind his back. Shot in gorgeously grainy Super 16mm, Moonrise Kingdom alternates between the flush of first love and the ache of middle-aged compromise. Just lovely. (At West Newton.)

The Paperboy ★★★ Precious director Lee Daniels' hysterically overheated adaptation of Pete Dexter's novel became notorious at the Cannes Film Festival because of a scene where Nicole Kidman pees on Zac Efron. That's not even the weirdest part. The suddenly unstoppable Matthew McConaughey stars as a good ol' boy returning to his swampy Florida home to investigate the murder of a corrupt sheriff. An awful John Cusack plays a cretin who just might be wrongly accused. Kidman headlines as his beloved, in a campy, white-trash tour de force, while Efron roils around in an unrequited hormonal frenzy. To call the movie lurid would be an understatement. It's a sweaty, cheerfully disreputable picture that offhandedly says more about race relations than The Help tried to shout from rooftops. Macy Gray narrates as the maid who's seen it all, and her maternal relationship with Efron provides the only ray of light in this dark and nasty noir, one that's really more about social marginalization than any mystery. Shame about that ending. (In the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–styled sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female songstresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throwaway one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Seven Pyschopaths ★★★ Playwright Martin McDonagh's second feature film dearly wants to be a poison letter to all the swaggering stereotypes that put food on his table. A vicious Irish Catholic with a punitive temperament, McDonagh seeks to bite the hand that feeds, casting Colin Farrell as a drunken screenwriter (naturally named Martin) who falls in with a couple of low-rent dog-nappers (Sam Rockwell and Christopher Walken), who make their living hustling pooches from the tar pits, eventually returning the canines to grateful owners and cashing sizeable reward checks. Problems arise when they swipe a shih tzu from an emotionally imbalanced crime-lord played by Woody Harrelson, and then all the wrong people get murdered. It's a silly, stupid series of contrivances over a dumb little dog, which I think is probably McDonagh's point. Seven Psychopaths aims to mock a culture of potty-mouthed gangster-wannabes who have seen too many movies, calling out the viewer for engaging in such adolescent empowerment fantasies—while at the same time working pretty well as an example of the genre. A neat trick. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Daniel Craig brings Agent 007 back to the screen in the series' 23rd feature, Skyfall.

Smashed ★ ½ Movies about recovery always conveniently leave out the hard parts. Director James Ponsoldt (working from a script he wrote with Susan Burke) also forgot to film a third act to this annoyingly truncated tale of a hard-drinking schoolteacher (Mary Elizabeth Winstead) who hops on the wagon, much to the chagrin of her boozy husband (Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul). How does one still relate to a spouse when your lives suddenly take drastically divergent paths? It's an excellent question that a better film might've addressed. Instead, here we just suffer through goofball subplots with married sitcom stars Megan Mullally and Nick Offerman clowning for comic relief. The former plays the school principal, mistaking Winstead's hungover vomiting for morning sickness. The latter is an AA sponsor with a secret crush played for giggles. Winstead is appealing, and Paul is always dependable, but Smashed lazily leaves all their dramatic developments off-screen by discreetly fading to black and skipping ahead a few months. Apparently nobody wanted to write the rough stuff. (At Kendall Square.)

Taken 2 ★★ ½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie cold-bloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Ted ★★ ½ Much like writer/director Seth MacFarlane's animated-TV shows, Ted is hysterical, until all of a sudden it isn't anymore. As most comedies these days revolve around man-children refusing to grow up, give MacFarlane credit for taking the gag to its logical conclusion and casting Mark Wahlberg as a 30-something who can't let go of his teddy bear. That the stuffed animal is a walking, talking drug user is only half of the joke. Seeking to settle down with his girlfriend, played by Mila Kunis—who unfortunately is presented as the same tired scold we see in most films in which women aren't allowed to be funny—Wahlberg's dopey meathead routine is a brilliant match for a perverted bear. Like all MacFarlane comedies, Ted leans mainly on non sequiturs and pop-culture references. His jokes rely on recognition, not wit. Still, it's all amusing for an hour or so, until it decides to have a plot. The third act is just stuffing. (In the suburbs.)

Trouble With the Curve ★★ ½ Clint Eastwood is never less than delightful in Trouble With the Curve, an otherwise lousy movie helmed by his longtime assistant director Robert Lorenz. The octogenarian icon stars as a crotchety baseball scout trying to cling to his job with the Atlanta Braves, despite the fact that he's obviously going blind. There's nobody better at being a curmudgeon, and Eastwood growls and cusses before displaying stray moments of unexpected delicacy. His semi-estranged daughter, Mickey (named for Mantle, naturally), steps in to do what she can. Played by Amy Adams, she's never quite credible as a baseball-obsessed tomboy. A believability-stretching road trip to North Carolina ensues, but there's really not all that much going on in Randy Brown's determinedly low-stakes screenplay. At least not much besides the pleasure of watching the lead performances. Trouble With the Curve doesn't just remind you what a wonderful screen presence Eastwood is; it makes you appreciate him even more as a director because Lorenz does such a crummy job. (In the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo generation is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Alternative Rock

Auxiliary Plans

Whether Oklahoma band Other Lives was founded with ideas of escapism or perhaps reincarnation, the members now find themselves in an enviable position. Taking their sophomore album in a different direction (their debut was produced by Beck drummer Joey Waronker), the band crafted Tamer Animals over 14 months in their own studio space. The result is an overlay of frontman Jesse Tabish's harrowing vocals and his bandmates' cellos, drums and trumpets. Their sound is comparable to Beirut or Thom York, and over the last two years, the group has opened for Radiohead, toured with Bon Iver and played Coachella. Other Lives now heads off on their own journey, playing Paradise Rock Club on Nov. 27. Leora Yashari

Subconscious Effort

Original 'Stache

As the master of surrealism, Spanish artist Salvador Dalí and his iconic imagery evoke fluid dreamscapes filled with mystery and possibility. More than 2,000 of Dalí's bizarre, provocative pieces—the largest collection anywhere—have been acquired from a Dalí family friend. On display for the first time are psychedelic paintings, illustrations and rare copper plates that explore the artist's spectacular subconscious. Take a look at Dalí's inner tickings at DTR Modern Galleries through Dec. 21.

POINT OF PRIDE

Gaily Ever After

Turns out fairy godmothers and godfathers do exist, and they're avid supporters of the Point Foundation, which held its annual Boston Cornerstone event at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston. The evening raised major bank to help LGBTQ students facing financial hardship. Among the buff and the beautiful on hand were cochairs Rodney Raftery and Ceceilia Allwein, eminence grise John Vasconcellos and the devastatingly handsome Bill Barr, tall drink of water John Koss, barely legal Holyoke Mayor Alex Morse, interior design avatar Michael Carter and his veterinarian hubby, David Rousseau, delicious gingersnaps Lauren Joy and Karen DeTemple, dashing English equestrian Paul Butterworth, and every other successful A-list gay in Boston.

Rarely has anyone given a speech as eloquent as Harvard med student and Point scholar Cary Crall, who choked everyone up with a personal story that went from a conservative Mormon upbringing featuring (the recently outlawed) "reparative therapy," to recognizing his proud father sitting in the audience.

Meanwhile, the evening's most arch remark was, "I don't hold anything against you. But if I did, I'd use hand sanitizer."

Dough, Re, Mi

This year's Storybook Ball had a Sound of Music theme, and while there weren't any raindrops on roses or whiskers on kittens, there were a few of our other favorite things, like cocktails in glasses and party people in formalwear.

A benefit for Mass General's Children's Hospital, the big-ticket evening at the Museum of Fine Arts attracted the likes of cochairs Katherine O'Keefe and Kerry Swords, blonde bombshell Sarah Mars, newlyweds Michael and Adrienne Schlow, billion-dollar broker Michael Lorber, the spiffy John Reidy, Back Bay gajillionaire Jay Cashman and his gorgeous wife, Christy, über-groover Charles Ribakoff with the incomparable Patty, Our Lady of Chanel Mary Nobile-King, cupcake cutie Courtney Forrester and her stud-muffin, Michael, celebrity auctioneer Lenny Clarke and Wonder Woman Jen, and pretty much everyone else who knows how to schmooze, booze and have a good time while doing good.

How do you fit 300 people into the ballroom of the Mandarin Oriental, Boston? Entice them with tasty tidbits by top local chefs and then use a xylophone and a shoehorn to get them into their seats for a lively charity auction and a Q&A with Top Chef star Gail Simmons.

Shades of Hope—a benefit for the Melanoma Foundation—(of which The Improper was a proud sponsor) attracted an exuberant crowd that included Judeo-Cuban firecracker Dora Lewin, opera operator Mimi Dequesada, the devilishly handsome Arthur Arbetter, decorator about town Mark Bombara, the toothpaste commercial couple of Bill Emery and Chase Pennington, the beloved Mary Hull, XV Beacon chatelaine Amy Finsilver (looking smokin' in a Pucci dress), and impish real-estate hottie Michael Harper, to name but one percent.

The auction was a laugh-riot, thanks to salty emcee John Terrio, and the amount of money raised could've bought all the sunscreen in Palm Beach.

My only complaint: The party favor wasn't a pair of designer sunglasses. But even that couldn't have saved anyone from the UVA and UVB rays emanating from the dress of a woman whom someone described as, "A walking, radioactive disco ball." ✖✖✖

If the Shoe Fits

Among the daily acts of nihilism I experience living in a major American city, one of the most instructive happened a few weeks ago in a Newbury Street shoe shop.

"I think I'll go with these," I told the attendant after taking a few steps in a pair of black Italian loafers. They looked spruce, with a prudent sole and a trim cut to the toe cap.

Adam DeTour

The attendant blinked at me as if I had asked him if the model was available in glass slipper. When he rung up my purchase, he shook his head.

"Yeah, they do an OK walking shoe," he said. "If the only thing that matters is price point and you don't care at all about design." I could see the contempt pooling in the damp corners of his eyes. Even though this man worked on commission, he preferred to insult me than miss a chance to voice his disgust that I was only willing to pay $160 for something that would spend much of its working life pressed against the T platform.

So it struck me that the human spirit is wonderfully robust. To this shoe salesman, the expression of hot, foaming scorn for his customers transcended something as shallow as self-interest. What did he care about putting bread on his table if, even for a moment, he could shout to the rafters that I was a vulgar cheapskate? I left the store with my faith buoyed. We are, it's true, idealists. We are dreamers, after all.

The best sort of shopping experience opens you to this sort of wider perspective. In this issue, Hannah Lott-Schwartz's gift guide unveils vistas of luxury, style and whimsy.

PRESSING MATTERS

ELIZABETH ANDERSON has a type—hundreds of them, actually. Working out of studios at her alma mater, MassArt, and in Jamaica Plain, the 23-year-old first felt drawn to letterpress for its artisanal side. "I missed working with my hands and lost the connection to my work when I was designing on the computer," she says. Today, under the umbrella of B.Impressed, Anderson designs and creates notecards, journals and other custom paper goods, using a traditional letterpress with hand-set metal and wood type to achieve a relief effect. The work can be painstaking, but Anderson appreciates the pace and challenge. "Each form is like a puzzle," she says. "Finishing it is exactly like placing the last piece."

Good Eats

HIGH ON THE HOG

Next to rich, crimson-colored Ibérico ham, the creamy, bloodless butifara pales in comparison. But at Las Ventas, Julio de Haro's Harrison Ave. mercado specializing in luxe Spanish imports, the subtly spicy sausage shines in one of the store's made-to-order bocadillos. The best of the bunch, the Dona Ines, layers thin slices of pork with buttery, firm Manchego chips, garlicky aioli and baby greens. Tucked between cuts of a crusty baguette or ciabatta, it's like a ham and cheese sandwich of the highest order. ELIZABETH BOMZE

Tasting Notes

TAKE A POWDER

Under the weather and unsure of the endless array of cold-busters? Ward off the sniffles by playing mixologist with these immunity boosters. JENNIFER JACKSON

Emergen-C, Tropical

A fizzy drink mix packed with B vitamins, antioxidants and extra nutrients like phosphorous for added energy, it's flavorful enough to sport a tiny umbrella. But let it sit for too long and it begins to taste like last year's sunscreen.
$0.79 at Cambridge Naturals, 23 White St., Cambridge (617-492-4452) cambridgenaturals.com

EBoost Daily Health Booster, Açai Pomegranate

With a hot pink hue and sickly sweet taste, it's like bubblegum-flavored amoxicillin. While key ingredients include resveratrol (an antioxidant found in red wine), this is best dissolved in minimal water and taken as a shooter.
$1.29 at Cambridge Naturals, 23 White St., Cambridge (617-492-4452) cambridgenaturals.com

Beveri Immunity Boost, Natural Tangerine Flavor

It could pass for Tang if it weren't for the harsh, punch-in-the-face smell of vitamins (including B, C, zinc and immunity-boosting lactoferrin). Then again, if you're taking it, you probably can't smell anything anyway.
$1.49 at Whole Foods, multiple locations throughout Boston, wholefoodsmarket.com

Source Naturals Wellness Shot, Natural Berry

Extracts from Japanese honeysuckle flowers, Chinese mint and licorice make this the strongest-tasting liquid of the bunch. Dark, sweet and syrupy, it's a creative substitute for a port wine if taken with cheese and crackers.
$3.49 at Cambridge Naturals, 23 White St., Cambridge (617-492-4452) cambridgenaturals.com

Airborne, Pink Grapefruit

Tasting pleasantly like a grapefruit soda, it packs Chinese vitex as a natural expectorant. A little tequila makes this a vitamin-laced Paloma.
$7.99 at CVS Pharmacy, multiple locations throughout Boston, cvs.com

BIN THERE

TO THE TRASH POLICE: I didn't mean to leave my trash out on the wrong morning, but that doesn't mean you need to rummage through it to find something with my name on it. I feel violated, and I'm sure you're judging me based off the 40 low-fat vanilla yogurt containers I threw out. Well, good for you, you found my identity. But don't hold your breath for that $35. It's not that I don't have it; it's the principle of the matter.

Girl who got a package from My Habit

To my feature writing class: Stop fighting with each other about every possible topic. DJ girl: An hour-long discussion on how your high school was more academically challenging than everyone else's makes you look like a crazy brat. Guy obsessed with women's rights: I get it, but please stop talking about my uterus. I'm sitting through a four-hour course that I'm convinced is full of psychopaths.

Classmate on the computer looking at puppies

To Boston street-style bloggers: Just because it's trendy doesn't mean it's stylish. Let me really drive that point home with an example: If people wear Jeffery Campbell Litas and an American Apparel leotard, it doesn't mean they're fashionable. By putting them on your "street style" blog, you're only encouraging them and justifying their impulse shopping and Nylon Magazine/Nasty Gal worship. Boston, despite GQ's opinion, is an incredibly stylish place. Get through Mass. Ave.'s hipsters and college students' sweatpants and Uggs uniform, and you can find some serious fashion.

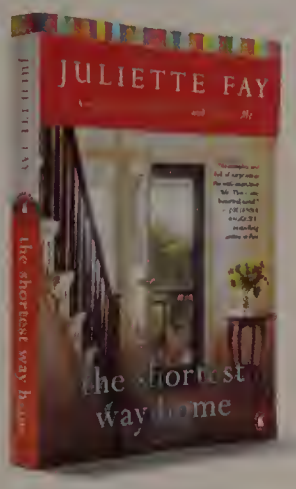
Mopsy { MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY }



FAMILY MAN

A novel of kindred bonds and homecoming.

SEAN, A NURSE WHO'S worked in chaotic and impoverished areas around the world, comes home to enormous complexities. Huntington's disease is a rumbling theme, having killed his mother and caused his father to flee the family. It haunts Sean, who does the existential dance of "Should I get tested, or not?" He lands on avoidance.

The novel includes brisk and chilly Aunt Vivvy, now moving into dementia, and frustrated, irreverent sister Deirdre, who itches to leave home to become an actress. Also, parentless nephew Kevin, who's hyper-sensitive to noise, touch and the tragic deprivations of his life. Enter Uncle Sean, a bit lost himself, who carefully works his way toward a sympathetic connection with the vulnerable lad.

Single forever, Sean rediscovers two high school classmates. One had taunted the other over a facial deformity, calling her "Becky Bubble." Getting a massage, Sean discovers the skillful, soothing hands belong to the very same Becky. Fay conveys their romance subtly and appealingly, with midlife wariness on either side. The return of Sean's father, making way-overdue amends, triggers ambivalence and tests our hero's nurturing nature. But a trip to Ireland accomplishes a long-awaited family reunion. ×××

QUOTE PAGE 51: "Sean sat there at the kitchen table, stunned. How could anyone think he'd been all about himself, least of all his sister? He'd spent his entire adult life tending to other people's gaping gangrenous wounds. He'd had dysentery more times than he could remember and had never owned anything he couldn't carry in a backpack. People commented on his selflessness so often it had almost gotten boring. He rose slowly, rattled by her attack.... Then he went upstairs and got into bed. He tried to pray for her—which is what he always did—after praying for the attacked, he'd send up a prayer for their attackers to turn their hearts. But it didn't work."

First Taste

HOT BUNS

The Legendary Restaurant Group is reinventing the cattle brand—instead of scorching a logo onto a cow, they've switched the focus to bread. Just opened in Somerville, Burger Dive serves every bun only after it's been passed under a hot metal iron, imparting both the restaurant's monicker and a lightly seared flavor. As the company's 10th venture, Burger Dive is its first foray into fast dining. It's also the first time they're carrying the brand all the way to the plate.

Don't let the name fool you—this is no seedy joint. The project has been a long time coming, says co-owner Chris Damian. "The burger concept was supposed to happen before Max and Dylans," he explains, which makes the idea at least five years old. The delay was on account of lacking the right space. With the new development in Somerville's Assembly Row, where the city broke ground for a new Orange Line T stop earlier this year, Damian and his business partner, Brad Dalbeck, found the solution. "Everybody likes a burger," says Damian. "Well, vegetarians don't. But the idea of fast-casual, good-quality food was always something that we wanted to do."

Though it's no drive-through, Damian jokes that the 40-plus seater resembles an oil-change shop, with large glass and steel garage doors that roll up in nicer months to open up a 120-seat patio. "We looked at this place as a distressed industrial build-out," says Damian. He and Dalbeck went as far as to purchase an old Pennsylvania farmhouse specifically to break down and upcycle for the restaurant's wood paneling.

At the counter, patrons choose from hot dogs or patties, including ground turkey or beef (a custom blend of chuck, short rib and skirt), chicken breast and vegetarian. And then there are the specialty burgers, like the Baconator, in which the patty is spliced with rendered, minced bacon. Accompaniments include sweet potato, thin- or thick-cut fries and onion "petals," and eight custom dipping sauces, ranging from Sriracha aioli to a vanilla-scented blend. If that isn't filling enough, milkshakes are thickened with desserts—key lime pie, red velvet cupcakes and the like—taken directly from a display case on the counter. Customer satisfaction might literally be a piece of cake.

Q&A

SUITE SPOT

Boston Ballet artistic director Mikko Nissinen premieres his new Nutcracker, playing at the Boston Opera House through Dec. 30.

Boston Ballet has been using the same sets and costumes for the past 16 years. What made you finally decide to change things up?

I think The Nutcracker, as a tradition, is going very well. I wanted to make sure that it continues to go very well, versus if it starts dipping and then fixing it. The other factor was really the money that we had to put into maintaining the set. The set was so old, and it made much more sense to turn the page this time. And I'm thrilled with it.

The designs look much more romantic. What were the inspirations?

It's the Jane Austen era for the reality part, the party scene, and then after that it's really taking the viewers for a big journey of different kinds of expressions. The reality part is more brown, tan and a little bit of lavender, purple and blue. But then when we go to the dream part—oh my God! It's lots of color. Then the third act is a little bit of a bow to the art form. It's almost fresco-like. It's the Nutcracker's kingdom, and there's a more royal thing about it. It's just done with such detail. I remember telling [designer] Robert Perdziola initially that I wanted it to be like some of those baroque theaters where you look into it, and the more you look into it, the more you keep finding things.

If you could be any character in The Nutcracker, who would you be?

I'd probably want to be Drosselmeyer or the Mouse King. Drosselmeyer is the total conduit of this dream. He's like this shadow that goes with Clara, and he helps her. When she gets too scared, he's there, and sometimes he's just observing the dream. Then the Mouse King is just so incredible. It's so royal, it's so ratty, and [he] fights with a martini pick and an olive.

What's going to happen to the big dancing teddy bear?

The teddy bear is going to be part of it. There's also going to be another character introduced called the Rabbit. And the Gingerbread will make a little cameo appearance in the battle scenes. So you'll have your beloved characters, some being quite different, some being quite similar to what they were.

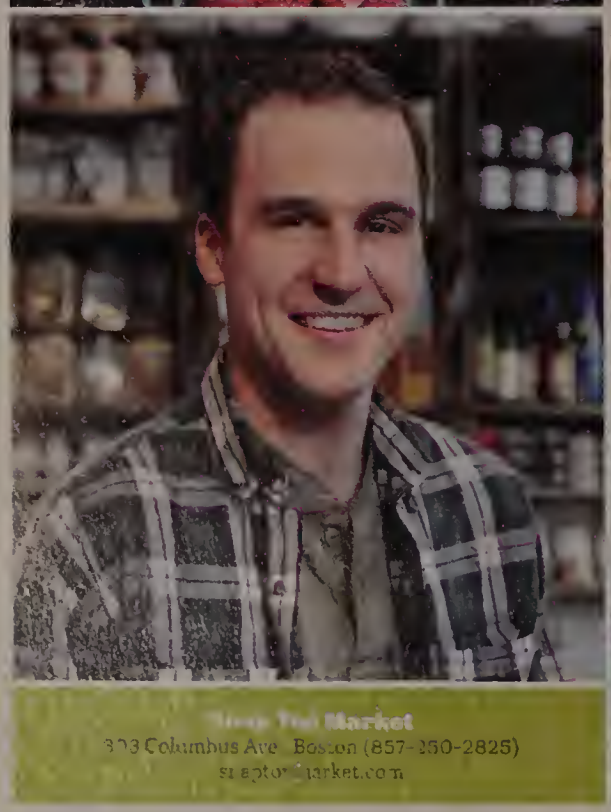
Wine

Bold, Beautiful Reds

Looking for something for the wine lover on your list? A big and cellar-worthy red really fills the bill. But while many reds can develop interesting flavors with aging, only a fraction of those also provide a full "wow" experience when they're young. The following three have it all.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Now or laters.



Stags Leap CLIFF LEDE CABERNET SAUVIGNON, 2007 ($60, MARTIGNETTI LIQUORS) A super-concentrated wine with a rich, chocolate-raspberry bouquet and velvety texture, this bottle is so good now it's hard to imagine the multidecade lifespan that lies ahead of it. Full-bodied and dense, this major-league Napa cab may be relatively unknown, but it's as stylish as many famous labels that weigh in at twice the price. Aged in 60 percent new French oak, the Cliff Lede displays quintessential Stags Leap finesse, which moderates its otherwise massive fruit intensity. Enjoy with rosemary-seasoned lamb.

Altesino BRUNELLO DI MONTALCINO, 2007 ($75, FEDERAL WINE & SPIRITS) Brunello is the star of Tuscany, and Altesino's style emphasizes brilliant red fruit flavors. It has a mélange of floral, cinnamon, mineral and smoky aromas. The cherry notes are soft, but the finish is quite earthy and long. This is definitely a wine to decant, as it opens dramatically with aeration, bringing the seductive fruit flavors to the surface. If you're pouring a bottle today, pair with hard, aged cheeses.

Domaine Paul Autard CHÂTEAUNEUF DU PAPE ($40, POST ROAD LIQUORS) This estate-bottled beauty from the southern Rhone Valley is a blend of 70 percent Grenache, 15 percent Syrah and 15 percent of the über-obscure Counoise. It's got a smoky aroma of herbs and roasted wild game, a soft texture and lush, red berry fruit flavors. With a long peppery finish, this would be ideal with any slow-cooked, savory meat dishes.

TRUE TO HIS ROOTS

It's a classic coming-of-age tale. Steve Napoli had worked at his parents' produce market, Idylwilde Farms in Acton, since he was 10 years old. Over the years, he saved his money and eventually moved to the big city to open his own place. With Snap Top, his shop in the South End, Napoli, 26, specializes in everything you'd expect from a boutique grocer—fancy cheeses and high-end sauces, nuts and treats. Adding variety is a lineup of artisanal tastings and bushels and crates of local produce. Stop in for a honeycrisp or a Braeburn, and see how the apple doesn't fall far from the tree. ELIZABETH BOMZE

THE SOMETHING-FOR-EVERYBODY PRICE FOR A BOTTLE OF FINE WINE

NAME: Tamarind Paloma.

PRICE: $12.

INGREDIENTS: Milagro Silver Tequila, Cocktail Kingdom Wormwood Bitters, tamarind soda.

INVENTOR: Beehive general manager Bertil Jean-Chronberg.

TASTE: Curiously light yet tangy, with the clean bite of the tequila up front. The fruit from the tamarind takes on a crisp, bitter note from the wormwood, allaying the sugars. This is what you'd get if Vincent van Gogh ran a lemonade stand outside a Mexican bodega.

TRADITION: "The bartenders here are trained by the book," says Jean-Chronberg. "If you come in here and order a Manhattan, I guarantee that it will be made with Canadian Club and a maraschino cherry." But after perfecting the traditional recipes, the bartenders get to play. Hence, tamarind.

INNOVATION: "The Paloma base is a classic, vintage cocktail," says Jean-Chronberg. "Tamarind soda is a very old product in the islands and South America. We found one made with real cane sugar." He orders the soda 60 cases at a time.

RESTRICTION: "We never put more than three or four elements in a cocktail," says Jean-Chronberg. "Same as in the kitchen. You don't want things fighting. Focus on quality."

PAIR WITH: Something simple, like guac and chips. Or, as Jean-Chronberg suggests, "Drink it before dinner."

SEASONALITY: What might have tasted egregiously summery is grounded by the wormwood's earth notes. Despite being pastel-colored and fruity, this doesn't clash with sweater season.

FOR A 180-DEGREE ALTERNATIVE: Embrace the winter with the Kentucky Orchid, a hot apple cider cocktail made with butter-infused bourbon and all spice dram. "It's been on the menu for two weeks, and we're going through 20 liters of bourbon per week."

POE ON THE GO

And maybe more for Area Four

BRIAN POE IS A fun-loving chef. In fact, he uses the word in just about every sentence when describing his latest project, Estelle's, opening in the South End. It's a "fun, Southern concept, " Poe says. Despite more than two years of prepping—while he also ran Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake and the Tip Tap Room—he says "this has been quite a bit of fun for me." Why is that adjective so unavoidable? "It keeps me in less trouble than that other F-word."

And what could be more fun than bouncing ideas around with executive chef Eric Gburski, formerly of East Coast Grill. Although the dishes have yet to be finalized, expect items like shrimp and grits, and sweet potato-pecan pie. Naturally, there'll be fried chicken, but Poe and Gburski are planning a signature brisket along with other items to keep the menu southern-influenced and not southern-centric. Price points are reasonable—$5–$10 for appetizers, $12–$20 for entrees—and the fun is slated to start by mid-December.

RUMOR MILL: KENDALL Square's Area Four may be looking to expand into Somerville. The restaurant's publicist tells us they're "exploring options for a second location, but nothing is final yet." An early name pitch: We like the sound of Area Four and a Half.

The Escape Artist {NANCY GAINES}

ALL HOURS

Lisbon wakes up when the sun sets.

SIGN OF THE TIMES Lisbon lights up after dark.

THE PORTUGUESE CAPITAL has lately earned a reputation for its social life. In this city of about a half-million, entertainment can be less edgy than in other European destinations, but it compensates with a welcoming spirit. Not to mention, theater companies, rock festivals and a growing showcase of independent film festivals continue to thrive.

A pop-up party land, Lisbon's Bairro Alto comes alive with a noisy street scene that evaporates by dawn. You can't see the neighborhood looking up from the city's downtown, and you can only get there by climbing sidewalks barely wide enough for human beings or on skinny streets too narrow for cars. Throngs of people revel in the myriad bars and outside on the cobblestones—as this is the only place in the city where drinking in the street is permitted. It's a constant mini-Mardi Gras.

Beginning about 10 pm, rows of nondescript doors, shuttered and blank by day, open to reveal one-room bars, clubs and restaurants. It's a row of charming cubbyholes, numbering about 150 on the main drag, Rua da Atalaia, and populated by gays and straights, singles and couples, street philosophers, musicians and just plain partygoers.

On the edge of the Bairro, check out the Pavilhão Chinês Bar (the Chinese Pavilion Bar), which is crammed with the late bar owner's spectacularly eccentric collection of 19th-century toy soldiers, mugs, maps and artworks. Be You Bar Lounge shines with charming little blue lights, under which bartender Claudia Maria Borges makes fresh cocktails and friends. The establishment is crowded and narrow, so you get up close with your neighbors. Borges, wearing what looks like knitting needles in her hair, holds court, her talk getting the crowd rolling. As do her Morganskas, a crushed ice, vodka and fresh strawberry concoction in a plastic cup that you can carry down the dodgy paths. "Lisbon is all about

✓ Traveler's Checks

Some places in Lisbon still permit indoor smoking. Be prepared for a table full of Marlboro men next to you and your salad, or child.

The "couvert," or cover, is an array of small foods served before you order. Want it or not, you're billed for it, sometimes up to $15. Wave the waiter away if you don't want the extra charge.

liberty, freedom and discovery," she says. "Every single street has a magic, hidden adventure about it." Indeed, rows of bars run at parallel angles from the cobbled streets, looking dark and narrow, like the interiors of old railroad cars.

The city has a good public transit system, but you can walk from the Bairro Alto through the Baixa (business and shopping) to the waterfront, much like walking from Kenmore Square to Quincy Market. The climate makes this nearly always enjoyable: 60 degrees in winter to 85 in summer, and never snow. For stylish accommodations—part vintage, part ultra modern—check into the Altis Avenida, a boutique in Lisbon center with a singular seventh floor balcony cocktail lounge and stellar dining room.

As is the case in many watery cities, the old riverfront warehouses have been transformed into cosmopolitan bars, clubs and restaurants. The center of the area is the marvelously restored Commercial Square, formerly the royal seat of power, bordered by outdoor eateries like Can the Can, an industrial chic café that, like many entertainment spots, presents seasonal productions of fado, traditional Portuguese blues music.

The hippest clubs in the city are in the docklands, opening at midnight and winding down at 6 am. Top of the list is the dramatic Lux Frágil, partly owned by Cambridge's John Malkovich (although sightings are rare). Lux holds three stories of bars, a stage, dance floors and a lounge, plus an open-air balcony where you can sip a nightcap as the sun comes up. In the same neighborhood is OpArt, a similar but smaller concept—cafe by day, club by night—featuring electronica and house music.

All the activity stimulates the appetite. For a hearty base—steak with eggs, salted cod, rice and potatoes—get a table at Ibo, an elegant restaurant melding Mozambique and Portuguese cuisine. Try the chicken, Zimbabwe style, while looking out on the marina. O Barrigas (meaning "belly") is an intimate spot with an emphasis on local specialties like octopus and pork loin.

As Borges says, "Lisbon starts late and finishes early, be it from Saturday night fever or a chill Sunday night." And there's a lot to do before sunrise. ✖✖✖

BEHIND THE MASK

Rich flavors characterize this Puerto Rican restaurant's best dishes.

Vejigantes
57 W. Dedham St., Boston
(617-247-9249)
vejigantesrestaurant.com

SHELLBOUND You'll find colorful displays on the walls and on your plate, like the paella marinera artisanal.

YOU LOOK LIKE YOU KNOW how to throw a party," said a tanned South Ender, back from a Caribbean vacation, to Hector Piña. Behind the small bar, Piña, co-owner of Vejigantes with his wife, Nivia, was comfortably juggling multiple tasks: bruising mint for mojitos ($10), directing his servers and carrying on conversations with a growing line of diners eager for a table at the 50-seat eatery in the Villa Victoria Plaza. Named after the colorful, horned masks prevalent at Puerto Rican festivals (and that adorn the walls of the restaurant), Vejigantes cultivates the practiced charm of a longstanding local favorite, despite only having opened in July. Birthday gatherings, for instance, prompt the staff to throw impromptu carnivals by donning vejigantes and getting out the sparklers. While the atmosphere is consistently festive, the food is mixed. The best dishes, like the soups and stews, present flavors that overlap with each bite in impressionistic fashion, while the fried appetizers, like the codfish fritters ($5) and alcapurrias ($5), or ground-beef fritters, tend to be greasy, with the seafood inedibly tough.

As evidenced by the soup sizes, Vejigantes' doesn't do anything on a small scale. Doña Carmen's plantain soup ($6), made from Nivia's mom's recipe, is a basin of shredded plantains simmered in water and minimal seasonings until they're reduced to the fruit's creamy essence. The simplicity of the ingredients belies the intricate flavors, with a pleasant note of grassiness emerging from a subtle, rounded sweetness. Listed under the house specials, the seafood casserole ($27) brings a tub of tomato-based broth brimming with octopus, lobster, shrimp, calamari and clams. Even without the tostones (fried plantain patties), which come as a side, it'd be difficult to finish half the serving. The casserole gets its delicious, intense flavor from a liberal use of sofrito, comprising garlic, oregano and other spices. Less balanced was the traditional lobster soup ($20), another barrel of broth and noodles, which suffered from an overdose of garlic and overcooked shellfish.

Tough, stringy meat also spoiled the grilled skirt steak ($14). Although cooked to medium-rare as requested, the beef was dry, and the lackluster chimichurri sauce hardly helped improve the blandness. The paella marinera artisanal ($45) for two was stunning in presentation but disappointing in taste. Stewed rice with calamari, lobster, shrimp and clams spilled from deep-fried plantains arranged like open clamshells. Substituting sofrito for saffron, the

BOWLED OVER Doña Carmen's plantain soup

Puerto Rican version of paella would've been better had the shellfish not been desiccated, yielding rubber-band-like squid and shriveled clams and lobster. Instead of the paella, order the shrimp in Vejigante creole sauce ($18), an outstanding dish of perfectly cooked shrimp in a tangy, slightly spicy tomato-based sauce, which should be ordered with the malanga puree, a mash of tarot root and garlic.

B.N.'s Picks

Plantain soup

Seafood casserole

Shrimp in creole sauce

Pork mofongo

The best item at Vejigantes, however, isn't on the menu, but it'll improve whatever shortcomings you may find: the house-made hot sauce. Consisting of two kinds of Puerto Rican chilies, olive oil, vinegar, garlic and various fruit peels, the mixture's creeping heat makes every dish memorable. It's definitely a must with the pork mofongo ($8), a pyramidal mix of shredded, slow-roasted pork and green plantains, served with a side of chicken broth. The slow burn of the hot sauce combined with the salty, chewy mofongo made for a budget-priced, hearty meal at the bar. On the side, stick with beer, like Presidente ($5), or a mojito. Only order the house specialty, the Coquitini ($10), if you like cloyingly sweet eggnog.

Unlike the tanned South Ender at the bar, not everyone can afford a trip to the islands this winter, but there are enough authentic gems on Vejigantes' menu to make you feel closer to Puerto Rico. The restaurant has already gained a following, not least because it aims to bring a new cuisine to an area gentrified by gastropubs. There's a vivifying energy to Vejigantes, and with its success, hopefully more Latin flavors will find a place in the South End's dining scene. ✖✖✖

Q: WHAT ARE THE MOST COMMON USES OF BOTOX?

A: Botox® and Dysport® are brand names of botulinum toxin, which is used to reduce frown lines and wrinkles on the upper part of the face. The facial muscles that create those wrinkles are injected, causing the muscles to relax and the lines to disappear. The result is a smoother brow, and you look less angry and tired. The effect lasts 3 to 6 months.

At SkinHealth, we most commonly treat the "11s", the vertical lines between the eyebrows; frown lines on the forehead; and "crow's feet", those crinkly lines at the side of our eyes.

This is a perfect time of year to schedule a treatment so you are looking fresh and vibrant for the holiday season.

ANY WAY YOU SLICE IT

Ang Lee's adaptation is ambitious but stale.

Life of Pi ★★½
Starring Suraj Sharma, Irrfan Khan, Rafe Spall, Tabu and Gérard Depardieu. Based on the novel by Yann Martel. Screenplay by David Magee. Directed by Ang Lee. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

THERE WERE A LOT OF regrettable movie trends in the late 1990s, but I think my least favorite was the lazy screenwriter's shortcut where characters sit around telling the story and explaining the themes under the misguided notion that it's the only way to make period pieces "relevant" to modern audiences. Who can forget Gloria Stuart perpetually interrupting Titanic, those bickering kids in The Bridges of Madison County, or elderly Private Ryan's visit to the cemetery? I know I'd like to.

That unfortunate structural gambit comes back with a vengeance in Life Of Pi, Ang Lee's visually rapturous yet stultifying adaptation of Yann Martel's zillion-selling novel about a boy stranded on a lifeboat with a Bengal tiger. Filmmakers from M. Night Shyamalan to Alfonso Cuarón have been circling this book for the past decade, all trying to crack Martel's tricky mix of religion, allegory and wonder.

No one's cracked it yet.

Finding Neverland screenwriter David Magee settles on the banal choice of having Rafe Spall play "the Writer," a blocked novelist having lunch with Irrfan Khan's mysterious adult Pi, who offers to "tell a story that will make you believe in God." It's an awkward setup and almost entirely unnecessary as it leaves the audience with the queasy notion that Spall is only around because they needed to shoehorn a white guy into the movie.

> Life of Pi is gorgeous to stare at, even when the iridescent algae looks a bit too much like a screensaver.

We drone along through Pi's childhood, in which he was raised in an actual zoo rendered by Lee in slightly heightened reminiscences. The young Hindu boy embraces Catholicism and Islam as well, an evolution seen in long-winded theological discussions that presumably play better on the page. Things finally pick up when Pi's family boards a freighter headed to Canada with all their animals in the cargo hold.

The shipwreck itself is an extraordinary feat of filmmaking, employing CGI effects to grant the images a larger-than-life, storybook quality. The use of 3D is particularly adept, utilizing the technology to create the illusion of depth within the frame, rather than flinging a lot of stuff in our faces the way most directors do. The sheer vastness of the sea and oversized waves dwarf our teenage protagonist, who soon finds himself the only human survivor, adrift on a cramped lifeboat with sparse supplies and a handful of animals to keep him company. Since one of these animals happens to be a massive tiger named "Richard Parker," you don't have to know much about the food chain to figure out that pretty soon it's going to be just the two of them.

Newcomer Suraj Sharma handles a difficult role quite well, holding the screen while acting opposite a costar created inside a hard drive. The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds nifty ways to survive under impossible conditions with a traveling companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks.

There's no shortage of eye candy during these passages, as Lee and cinematographer Claudio Miranda push the color palette into ever more painterly abstractions. A couple of puzzling aspect-ratio switches aside, Life of Pi is gorgeous to stare at, even when the iridescent algae looks a bit too much like a screensaver.

The problem is that the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. Cuts from expansive vistas to two dudes sitting around in a living room are whiplash-inducing. And if, by any chance, you happen to have missed this story's honkingly obvious metaphors, don't worry because these guys explain everything you're seeing in laborious detail.

Martel's novel hinged on a gut-punch ending that asked some fascinating questions about storytelling as an act of faith. Lee and Magee dunderheadedly decide to just say everything out loud, with "the Writer" reciting subtext directly into the camera lens, and Khan's adult Pi announcing the moral of the story and asking us all what we've learned. (I half expected him to assign essay questions as post-movie homework.)

The first rule of filmmaking is show, don't tell. Life of Pi shows and tells. You'll wish you could watch with the sound turned off. ×××

ROBOT LOVE

Rubblebucket
plays Royale on Dec. 5.

Rubblebucket streamlines its funky sound while ratcheting up the fun.

FLUORESCENT STREAMERS hang from microphone stands as eight musicians meld Afrobeat with New Wave dance-rock, and L.E.D. medallions pulse on their moving bodies. Out in the audience, volunteers hoist oversized papier-mâché robot puppets and dance the mess around.

Such is the crazy world of Rubblebucket, the Boston-raised, Brooklyn-based band that's evolved from meditative trance jams to heady pop, from local bars to national clubs and festivals.

"It's our job to make people want to dance," lead singer and baritone saxophonist Kalmia Traver says, though her group takes an increasingly broad view of how to accomplish that mission.

Once a horn-heavy outfit dubbed Rubblebucket Orchestra, the ensemble trimmed back the horns and tightened the focus on Traver as frisky frontwoman. In turn, the band paints more keyboard-dappled textures on its latest EP, Oversaturated, which dropped in September and favors '80s-flavored contemplation over giddy parade-band rabble.

"I wanted to see what it's like just writing songs that worked with piano and vocals, and [songs] would translate without all the bells and whistles," says trumpeter/singer Alex Toth, who cofounded the group with Traver after the horn-playing couple spent time in the local reggae band John Brown's Body.

Fans needn't worry about Rubblebucket smoothing out the edges, however, as the band delights in funky spontaneity. "There's a punky aspect," Toth says. "If it starts to feel too polished or intentionally executed or over-arranged, that feels kinda gross to me. It's important for the live show and the band to have some wiggle room to feel the energy of the crowd and play off one another."

To that end, band members have long-jumped into the audience to fuel the party. Rubblebucket also has increasingly realized Traver's dream to expand the sensory experience through visual elements. They range from her handsewn outfits ("It helps me get into character," she says) to zany low-budget props designed by collaborator

Neil Fridd of the Terror Pigeon Dance Revolt!.

"Neil does everything to break down the wall between the stage and the dance floor," Traver says. On nights when Fridd is present, she says, "He's on the dance floor the entire time, moshing and getting people riled up."

When Fridd's not around, his robot puppets remain, their giant arms swinging above the crowd—and even onstage. "We had interesting robot exchanges, getting freaky," Toth says of their Nov. 14 show in Syracuse, N.Y. "A big, happy make-out session."

"It's our job to make people want to dance."

The romance between Toth and Traver began when they met as music majors at the University of Vermont, where they graduated in 2006. "We were two little music dorks," Traver says, "with our horns strapped to our bikes, riding up and down the hills of Burlington, Vt., playing every night with all these different friends."

Their outlook at that time can be traced to what Rubblebucket has become today. "The two of us were all about improv then," Traver says. "We were working on being really open, with big ears—and playful."

By the time they settled on the Boston scene, the onetime "jazz kids," as Toth puts it, expanded their world to Bob Dylan, Neil Young and the Beach Boys as well as Afrobeat and funk. "It's an interesting journey to circle around this stuff and continue to seek out where we stand," the trumpeter says. They found fellow adventurers for Rubblebucket with trombonist Adam Dotson, bassist Jordan Brooks, guitarist Ian Hersey, keyboardist Darby Wolf, drummer Dave Cole and percussionist Craig Myers.

"We're a versatile bunch," Toth says, "so it can be hard to stay in one place because we're excited by a lot of different stuff. Now, with this totally globalized music culture, you can listen to anything at any time and be influenced."

At the same time, local ties still bind the group, which was voted top live act at the 2009 Boston Music Awards. "I know so many faces in the crowd from those early days at Matt Murphy's or Johnny D's," says Traver, whose band hits Royale on Dec. 5 with Reptar. "We really groove so much as a band in Boston." ×××

IN PASSING

Estate sales aren't always a bargain.

WHILE IT'S NORMAL to keep treasured family heirlooms, it's a little odd to claim the possessions of dead people you didn't know. When a friend gave me a nicely broken-in sweatshirt bearing the logo of my alma mater, I was psyched until I learned that this particular garment became available because its owner died. I have to go pretty deep in the laundry roster before I break out the dead-guy hoodie.

And yet, it was inevitable that my cheapskate instincts would eventually lead me to an estate sale. So when I find a weekend sell-off that includes outdoor furniture from Restoration Hardware, we pile into the car to go investigate. I'm no furniture snob, but I'll risk a haunting to get a good deal on some chaise lounges.

I don't know much about estate sales, but I figure that you may as well stick to ones where they're selling rich-people stuff. If you're going to fight an angry ghost to get yourself a used food processor, it better at least be from Williams-Sonoma. Otherwise, I'll just go buy a new one at Target that doesn't come with banshees or phantasms.

We pull up to an imposing edifice that looks like it's either a vacation house, a barn or some combination of the two. The barn part is clearly designed to accommodate actual horses, which I take as a promising sign. The only danger is that when your horses have a summer house, you're probably the kind of person who leaves all your good stuff to the horses.

Inside, we find that the Restoration Hardware chaise lounges are still available. The frames are rusty and the cushions moldered, but they might clean up OK. I'm pondering how to fit them in the car when I flip over the price tag and see that these soggy, rusty chairs are ambitiously pegged at $500 each, with the description noting that they cost more than $1,000 new. I guess I really am a rube, but it never occurred to me that a metal frame with a cushion on it might cost more than I once paid for a car. This, it turns out, will not be my last case of sticker shock.

Think that's funny? Send unbiased e-mails to ezra@improper.com.

In a side room, I discover a desk that sports a glass top supported completely by antlers. The desk looks like it belongs to Prince Joffrey from Game of Thrones or on the cover of the 2013 catalog for Ted Nugent Office Supplies. Asking price: $2,000. Nearby, a Haier wine fridge wears a $150 price tag, which might be reasonable if you couldn't buy the same thing for $119 at Wal-Mart.

I'm momentarily excited when, atop a mantle, I spy a three-liter bottle of wine for $10. Reality sets in when I discover that it's empty. There's definitely some hubris at work when you presume someone would pay for your recyclables.

After a spin around outside (John Deere lawn tractor, $11,000; assorted scraps of wood, $200), I leave empty-handed. I get the idea that these prices were set by the type of out-of-touch rich people who might go on The Price Is Right and guess that a gallon of milk costs $83.

Back at home, I peruse a few online estate sales to try to figure out if the one I attended was unusual, or if they're all characterized by an excessively high regard for funky old crap. The first thing I notice is that some estates are more exciting than others. One online sale includes a collection of ugly couches, some ammunition-packing machines and an orange Lamborghini Gallardo. Mommy, was grampa a drug dealer?

Random Lambos notwithstanding, the typical age demographic of the recently deceased means that an estate sale is probably not the place to go looking for, say, a new dirt bike. Underscoring that point, I find one online estate auction offering an album called Songs of the Gay '90s. The compilation doesn't include RuPaul's "Supermodel," on account of it's celebrating the 1890s, which were evidently quite gay. But if you're in the market for disturbing porcelain dolls that look like they come alive at night and stab you in the face, an estate auction might be for you.

So this is what happens to your stuff when you die: Online and in person, strangers file past and make fun of your antler desk and your overpriced lawn chairs. I take a look around my office at my own treasured stuff and realize that most of it is probably only relevant to me. I mean, how much would the auction company ask for the small ceramic Japanese guy who's bending over and showing you his butt? A friend of mine picked that up somewhere in Asia, and it gives me great pleasure that eventually my kids are going to have to figure out what to do with that. Give me $500 for it, and I won't even haunt you. ×××

"I was able to be myself, which helps in anything you do in front of an audience."

Soroff On OLIVIA CULPO

Miss USA tells us about getting in pageant shape, vacuuming and the importance of the smile.

ON JUNE 3, RHODE ISLAND NATIVE OLIVIA CULPO, 20, WAS crowned Miss USA. Culpo was studying acting and communications at Boston University (she's since taken a leave of absence) when she entered the Miss Rhode Island pageant on a whim, wearing a $25 rented dress. A cellist, Culpo has appeared at Symphony Hall, Carnegie Hall and was, until recently, a performer with the Boston Accompanietta. Culpo is residing in New York during her reign, and is involved in numerous charities focused on women's health. On Dec. 19, she'll compete for the title of Miss Universe.

Jonathan Soroff: After you won, did people just come out of the woodwork?
Olivia Culpo: Oh, yeah. Thousands and thousands. People from elementary school you can't quite remember trying to become your best friend.

Do you wear a tiara while vacuuming?
I was at my mom's house this weekend, and she did make me vacuum, but I was actually in sweatpants. So yes, beauty queens wear sweatpants, although not that frequently. And beauty queens vacuum.

High heels or sneakers?
Heels. I'm totally a girly girl.

Why do you think you won?
I was able to be myself, which helps in anything you do in front of an audience. If you project personality or form a personal connection, you can do better than if you're more reserved.

What are your top-three beauty secrets?
Number one: Drink a lot of water. It's really important for your immune system and your general health, but it's really important for your skin and to flush out toxins. Also, eat breakfast. It boosts your metabolism, and if you want to get into good eating habits, breakfast is where it starts. And green tea has a lot of antioxidants. A lot of tests say you age less by drinking a glass per day.

You impressed everyone with your answer about transgendered contestants. How did you phrase it?
I said that there are so many people who need to make a major change—whether it's surgery or whatever—to be happy, that if a woman or man went through that kind of procedure, they shouldn't face discrimination. It's just a choice to lead a happier life.

What would you do to achieve world peace?
We need to institute more foreign exchange programs for the youth because they need to understand that there are different places and different people with very different ideas about things. To learn to respect that, especially if it's instilled at an early age, makes people less likely to be intolerant.

What do people assume about you that's false?
For Miss USA, people assume you're self-absorbed and narcissistic. I like to think of this title as an opportunity to reach out to others, be a role model and help people.

How do you get into pageant shape?
It's a very strict diet. I work out, lifting weights and some cardio, every day. Low-fat protein and only healthy carbs. And eating five-to-six meals a day.

In the competition, did you do any of the old tricks, like Vaseline on your teeth?
No, I didn't do any of that. But there were girls backstage getting in their last set of crunches, contouring their abs, getting that bronze effect. I didn't do any of that stuff.

Were any of the girls catty?
Yes, but that's everywhere in the world. Whether you're in a beauty pageant or at Duane Reade, there's going to be someone a little nasty. You just have to ignore it.

What Miss USA duties came as a surprise?
There's a lot of hauling stuff around. We have the crown, and tons of other stuff. We have people to help us, but there are a lot of wardrobe changes.

What comes next?
I think I'm going to go back to school and study acting, either in New York or L.A. I don't think I'll be coming back to Boston, unfortunately.

Are you a total type A?
Definitely. I'm just way too organized. I'm just going to have to admit it.

Most annoying part of being Miss USA?
The uncertainty of every day. You have no idea what your schedule's going to be.

Advice for girls who want to compete?
Smile. A lot of the time, girls get caught up in what they look like, or what's coming next, and they forget to let their inner confidence and beauty shine.

What's it like to parade around in a bikini in front of millions of people?
I actually love the bikini part because everybody has a different body, and nobody is perfect, so that moment is really about your personality and what you can exude. It's not so much about physical appearance as your confidence and spirit.

So if I'd told you three years ago that you'd be Miss USA, what would you have said?
I would've said, "Shut up!" Maybe I would've said, "Gracie Lou Freebush?" The character Sandra Bullock plays in Miss Congeniality.

First thing you're going to eat after Dec. 19?
I love anything related to peanut butter, so I'm going to go with Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.

What happens if you win Miss Universe?
There's a lot more international travel. And my causes for Miss USA are breast and ovarian cancer. For Miss Universe, it's generally focused on AIDS awareness and HIV.

Any chance of a cello career?
No. I see myself going into acting. Maybe Broadway. That would be fun!

Thing you miss the most about Boston?
Oh, God. There's so much I miss! But I'll go with running along the Charles. ×××

The Improper Presents:

IT'S THE THOUGHT THAT COUNTS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

IT'S THE HOARIEST OF OLD TROPES BUT SOMETHING EVERYONE DEALS WITH THIS TIME OF YEAR: WHAT TO GIVE THE PERSON WHO HAS EVERYTHING? There are always those annoying individuals on your holiday gift list for whom anything material isn't a good idea. Like your college roommate who's so rich her vacation home has an attic full of still-wrapped hostess gifts. Or your uncle who goes to so many film festivals that his apartment is overflowing with designer sunglasses, iPads and other promotional swag. Or maybe your mother-in-law is just a hoarder.

Whatever the reason, there are plenty of ways to give without adding to your recipient's material burden—as well as ways to tell them what an astronomical pain in the ass they are. So we've assembled the following non-material gift guide (paired with passive-aggressive suggestions as to whom you might give the presents to). HAPPY HOLIDAYS!

FOR THAT HOLIER-THAN-THOU SISTER-IN-LAW WHO ALWAYS TRIES TO SEEM MORE THOUGHTFUL THAN YOU

Since 1944, Heifer International has shipped livestock and other "teach a man to fish" leg-ups to the downtrodden around the world. In other words, it's perfect if you want to feel morally superior to everyone else in the room while you're exchanging gifts. For instance, a mere $300 will buy a whole community access to clean drinking water. And if your sister-in-law is self-conscious about her weight, getting her an actual heifer might give the gesture extra oomph.

FOR THAT REPUBLICAN STILL SMARTING OVER THE NOVEMBER ELECTIONS

The David Sheldrick Wildlife Trust operates an animal rehabilitation preserve in Kenya, through which you can foster an elephant. The recipient will receive a profile and photograph of their adopted animal, although unfortunately, they can't rename it Mitt, Newt or Michelle Bachmann. After presenting this gift, you may want to tell an Obama joke to reassure everyone that you're not gloating. And by no means should you write on the card something along the lines of, "I hope your elephant fares better than a certain short-term Massachusetts senator."

FOR THAT UNBEARABLE RELATIVE WITH YOUNG IMPRESSIONABLE CHILDREN WHOM THEY OVERPROTECT AND SMOTHER

The number two most popular endangered species in the World Wildlife Fund's adoption program is that profanity-laced YouTube sensation, the Honey Badger. (Inexplicably, the Komodo Dragon is number one.) After basking in the somewhat baffled looks of the little ones' gratitude, suggest that they research it on the Internet. By the time you sit down to dinner, they'll be laughing and whispering, "Honey badger don't give a s. He's badass." When their parents react in horror, apologize sheepishly for removing the parental controls on their web browser.

FOR THE WICKED STEP-MOTHER FOR WHOM YOU AND YOUR SIBLINGS HAVE MULTIPLE NASTY NICK-NAMES THAT CAN'T BE USED IN POLITE COMPANY

There are lots to choose from here. The California Native Plant Society has an adopt-a-rare plant program that'll allow you to present the evil you-know-what with two taxa of plants presumed to be extinct, which sends a certain message. If she happens to be sensitive about her age, the Toronto Zoo will allow you to adopt a dinosaur egg. And while the Audubon Nature Institute has bargains like $15 for an African pygmy hedgehog, nothing says, "I loathe you" like giving someone a Formosan termite.

FOR YOUR POT-SMOKING, ABOUT-TO-GET-EXPELLED-FROM-FRESHMAN-YEAR NEPHEW

To let him know he's a space case, the International Star Registry will name a gaseous sphere after him. The accompanying certificate, written in Lord of the Rings–style calligraphy, will doubtlessly blend in with the decor of his dorm room. After he's kicked out and slinging French fries, he can spend late nights hunched over his bong and pondering the cosmic "reality" that there's a distant ball of fire in a far-off galaxy named for him. (We heartily applaud this business model and intend to start selling naming rights to grains of sand on the beach.)

FOR THAT AUNT WHO POOH-POOHS CLIMATE CHANGE WHILE FLICKING HER CIGARETTE BUTTS OUT THE WINDOW OF HER SUV

So the local Rotary and Kiwanis clubs are in a dead heat with fast food chains and religious organizations you've never heard of in adopting highways. If you log onto the Adopt a Highway website, though, the messaging is clear. Set to techno music, it reads: "Traffic… it doesn't always have to be negative. Turn it into something positive. Your Business Name Here. Make an impression." Alternatively, this is also an ideal gift for your nightmare of a cousin. Just dedicate a stretch of highway that he drives regularly in the name of his ex-wife or girlfriend.

FOR THE FLATULENT GRANDDAD WITH A SMART PHONE

iFart is a self-explanatory app that simulates the passing of gas with sound effects ranging from "The Dirty Raoul" and "Jack the Ripper" to "The Sick Dog" and "Fire Quacker." It may be sans odor, but everyone under the age of 11 will be in hysterics.

FOR THE GUY WHO CAN'T GET A DATE ON MATCH.COM

The "Honey, It's Me!" app features four daily video calls from a babe who says things like, "Good night! Sweet dreams!" Unfortunately, though, she only says them in Korean.

FOR THAT COLOSSAL BORE OF A BROTHER-IN-LAW

The most tedious podcast in the world: The Complete Internal Revenue Code Podcast Project. According to its creator: "I'm all about public service, and I could not think of a more worthy internet project than to record a reading of the Internal Revenue Code.... Let's kick it with Title 26, people!" Unfortunately, he quit after only 13 episodes, concluding with the apology: "As you can see, this project is on hiatus while the author seeks the guidance of a mental health professional. Check back here for updates as his various medications are adjusted."

FOR THAT FIERCE OPPONENT OF GAY MARRIAGE

Tickets to a performance by the Boston Gay Men's Chorus might be a nice way to spread a little goodwill.

We could go on and on. As you can see, there are endless ways to fulfill your holiday gift-giving obligations while wrapping them in a generous amount of attitude.

As for us, we'd prefer something a bit more tangible... preferably in cashmere. ✖✖✖

AFTER PRESENTING THIS GIFT, YOU MAY WANT TO TELL AN OBAMA JOKE.

Drawing Back the Curtain

Team Player The Dark Ages get a bit brighter in Pippin, a musical in which kings and royals become circus performers decked in top hats. From the mind of Stephen Schwartz, the lyricist and composer behind Broadway hits such as Godspell and Wicked, Pippin is now celebrating its 40-year anniversary with gusto. The charismatic character known only as the Leading Player introduces the young idealistic Pippin, son of King Charles, and guides him on a quest for a life of fulfillment. Joined by Montreal-based circus company Les 7 Doigts de la Main, and under the direction of Diane Paulus, the cast of Pippin presents a three-ring production. See Pippin's search for enlightenment at the A.R.T. Dec.5–Jan. 20. Amanda Furrer

Flash in the Pan

Creature Feature Bizarre beasts come to life in Pan's Labryinth, filmmaker Guillermo del Toro's story that interweaves 1944 fascist Spain with an eerie fantasy world filled with child-eating monsters, mysterious fauns and magical fairies. In the dreamy tale, a young girl, Ofelia, seeks to escape the reality of her life with her ailing mother and sadistic stepfather. When a peculiar creature, Pan, believes her to be the spirit of the beloved princess of his underworld, Ofelia must prove herself by completing three tasks. Find your way through this allegorical maze at ArtsEmerson on Nov. 30. Emily Tannenbaum

Reviews by Sean Burns

Alex Cross ★ Turns out if you take Tyler Perry out of a dress, he's got nothing. The self-made star of Madea's bizarre drag phenomenon makes a bid for mainstream fame by taking over for Morgan Freeman in this reboot of the Seven-lite franchise based on James Patterson's best-selling novels. As the titular sage detective/psychologist, Perry wanders around crime scenes mumbling in a monotone and looking uncomfortable while everybody talks about what a genius he is. Good to know, since we don't see Cross do anything resembling detective work. He and braying jackass partner Tommy Kane (Edward Burns) get stuck with a bunch of grisly homicides, which lands them in the crosshairs of Matthew Fox's shirtless psycho. (If there's a worse performance this year than the bug-eyed, screeching Fox, I haven't seen it.) It's all vaguely nasty and blisteringly stupid, with a great deal of plot holes, torture and dull forensics. In short, this is like paying 10 bucks to see every CBS procedural that I already don't bother to watch at home. (In the suburbs.)

Anna Karenina ★ Misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic takes place on a stage for some baffling reason. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft-told tale, in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way, gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information, and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyway, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game where a shot is taken every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she can be noticed over the production's A.D.D. din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (At West Newton.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Cloud Atlas ★★ ½ Some people call it the best movie of the year; others say it's the worst. The truth is that Cloud Atlas feels like both at the same time. Directed by Wachowski siblings Lana and Andy, splitting duties with Run Lola Run's Tom Tykwer, this insanely ambitious film explodes David Mitchell's carefully constructed nesting-doll stories into a single, centuries-spanning continuum where past, present and future overlap, as do recurring themes of enslavement and escape. Tom Hanks and the rest of the all-star cast keep popping-up, playing different (but sometimes oddly similar) characters in each disparate tale, often wearing elaborate prosthetic makeup that ranges from the sublime to the ridiculous—a turn of phrase that sums up Cloud Atlas in a nutshell. A lot of the time, this feels like D.W. Griffith's Intolerance by way of Zardoz. Yet the kitsch factor weirdly keeps with the picture's ardent, disarming sincerity. There's not a cynical moment in these three hours, and the actors throw themselves into their roles with wild, foolhardy abandon. (At Boston Common, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Flight ★★ The trouble with movies about addiction is that they all tend to be the same. There are only so many ways to run through the standard parabola of denial, rock-bottom, relapse and recovery before it starts to feel like déjà vu all over again. Denzel Washington stars as a hotshot pilot for a regional Georgia airline who responds to a fluke mechanical failure by inverting the plane in a daredevil move and saving the lives of almost a hundred passengers. Only catch is that he was smashed. It's a tremendous scene, but unfortunately the rest of this picture's bloated 139-minute running time follows Washington at his father's farmhouse, attempting to kick booze and drugs before a federal hearing that could land him in prison. He climbs on the wagon; he falls off the wagon. He climbs on the wagon again and then guess what happens next? He self-destructs over and over until it's eventually time for everybody to recite "The Serenity Prayer," so the movie can finally end. Rinse, wash and repeat. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Hitchcock ★ ½ Stupid and insulting, director Sasha Gervasi's cartoonish look behind the scenes at the making of Psycho casts Anthony Hopkins as the master of suspense and buries the actor beneath several tons of gooey prosthetic makeup and a ridiculous fat suit. It's awkward to watch someone try to perform with their head wrapped in Silly Putty. Not that it matters much, as Gervasi and screenwriter John J. McLaughlin can't be bothered to even feign interest in the actual nuts and bolts of Hitchcock's craft. They instead opt for a silly, tabloid farce that depicts the director as a creepy Peeping Tom living out his murderous sexual fantasies through imaginary conversations with serial killer Ed Gein (Michael Wincott). Hitch gets it in his head that his wife, Alma (Helen Mirren), is cheating on him with Danny Houston's pompous windbag, and the ensuing tiresome dysfunction comes complete with groaningly obvious inside jokes for movie buffs every five minutes. I'd rather watch Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, and when was the last time anybody said that? (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, first and foremost because it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of an underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Looper ★★★ Writer/director Rian Johnson's nifty, time-bending thriller stars Bruce Willis as the future Joseph Gordon-Levitt. The latter plays a hit man for the mob, knocking off targets beamed back to 2044 from 30 years hence. Except for one fateful day when he's supposed to shoot... himself? Johnson's intriguingly lo-fi vision of the future is full of vintage blunderbusses, designer drugs and a tricky maze of paradoxical timelines. Jeff Daniels drops by for a hilarious supporting turn as a bored gangster from the future, but the main event is Gordon-Levitt's uncanny Willis impersonation. He's got the squint and the sneer down pat, making his distracting prosthetic nose somewhat unnecessary. Johnson, who helmed the terrific art-house oddity Brick and the significantly less charming Brothers Bloom, tries to keep the sci-fi elements grounded with rural farmhouses and workaday diners. He bites off a bit more than he can chew, but kudos to Willis for tweaking his own iconography and heading into waters much darker than initially expected. A clever, crafty little picture. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Man With the Iron Fists ★★ ½ RZA's silly homage to VHS-era chop-socky pictures distinguishes itself from the recent glut of grindhouse tributes simply by virtue of sincerity. Unlike when Quentin Tarantino, or his legion of imitators, attempts to make a bad movie on purpose, there's no condescension here. The Wu-Tang Clan member is hopelessly out of his league when it comes to directing, but he'll be damned if he isn't going to make an epic throwback to the Shaw Brothers' double-feature fare—even giving himself the title role. Reportedly whittled down from a four-hour first cut, The Man With the Iron Fists is a jumbled hodgepodge of too many characters with conflicting motivations colliding in a one-horse town called Jungle Village. RZA's awkward narration attempts to smooth the gaps, but what's fun is his everything-but-the-kitchen-sink playfulness. The picture is outright stolen by Russell Crowe, who delightfully slums as a drunken Englishman with a taste for prostitutes and sex toys. The film is a mess, but always amusing. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–styled sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female songstresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throwaway one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Seven Pyschopaths ★★★ Playwright Martin McDonagh's second feature film dearly wants to be a poison letter to all the swaggering stereotypes that put food on his table. A vicious Irish Catholic with a punitive temperament, McDonagh seeks to bite the hand that feeds, casting Colin Farrell as a drunken screenwriter (naturally named Martin) who falls in with a couple of low-rent dog-nappers (Sam Rockwell and Christopher Walken), who make their living hustling pooches from the tar pits, eventually returning the canines to grateful owners and cashing sizeable reward checks. Problems arise when they swipe a shih tzu from an emotionally imbalanced crime-lord played by Woody Harrelson, and then all the wrong people get murdered. It's a silly, stupid series of contrivances over a dumb little dog, which I think is probably McDonagh's point. Seven Psychopaths aims to mock a culture of potty-mouthed gangster-wannabes who have seen too many movies, calling out the viewer for engaging in such adolescent empowerment fantasies—while at the same time working pretty well as an example of the genre. A neat trick. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of edginess. It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common, Fenway , Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Taken 2 ★★ ½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie cold-bloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Scare Tactics

Dressed to Kill

In Hitchcock, Anthony Hopkins plays the famous director during the making of Psycho.

Trouble With the Curve ★★ ½ Clint Eastwood is never less than delightful in Trouble With the Curve, an otherwise lousy movie helmed by his longtime assistant director Robert Lorenz. The octogenarian icon stars as a crotchety baseball scout trying to cling to his job with the Atlanta Braves, despite the fact that he's obviously going blind. There's nobody better at being a curmudgeon, and Eastwood growls and cusses before displaying stray moments of unexpected delicacy. His semi-estranged daughter, Mickey (named for Mantle, naturally), steps in to do what she can. Played by Amy Adams, she's never quite credible as a baseball-obsessed tomboy. A believability-stretching road trip to North Carolina ensues, but there's really not all that much going on in Randy Brown's determinedly low-stakes screenplay. At least not much besides the pleasure of watching the lead performances. Trouble With the Curve doesn't just remind you what a wonderful screen presence Eastwood is; it makes you appreciate him even more as a director because Lorenz does such a crummy job. (In the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2 ★★ ½ It's been five movies since the winsome, almost unwatchable Twilight, in which Kristen Stewart's Bella pouted through high school being adored by Robert Pattinson's sparkly vampire Edward, and the series has grown from mopey adolescent wish fulfillment to full-on gonzo camp. Even the fans don't seem to take it seriously anymore. Lucky for us, neither does director Bill Condon, who plays the absurd final chapter for maximum silliness. The central love triangle is finally resolved now that werewolf Jacob has fallen in love with (or imprinted on) Bella and Edward's half-breed baby, the unfortunately named Renesmee. The preening glam-rock stars from the vampire Vatican, led by a cackling Michael Sheen and the awesome Dakota Fanning, are en route to claim the child, and most of the movie is everybody standing around explaining their superpowers. But all the endless droning pays off in such a spectacularly goofy, over-the-top showdown that I damn near fell out of my chair laughing. Add a star if you're drunk. Subtract one if sober. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Music Edited by Hannah Lott-Schwartz

Electric Side
The Bronze Stage

Eric Emm and Jesse Cohen of Tanlines are determined to find something new under the sun. The Brooklyn natives have gone from remixing other musicians' tracks to making their own hits, blending both traditional and electronic instruments to create a style all their own. The tropics-inspired sound of their debut album, Mixed Emotions, explores the eventful period between adolescence and adulthood. Of course, it's drawn from personal experiences—like when the two came home from Europe to find an eviction notice on their studio door. After performing at the Guggenheim and the Whitney and touring with headliners like Vampire Weekend and the XX, the duo is now sunbathing in the spotlight. Watch the Tanlines bask in the glow on Nov. 28 at the Sinclair.

Lifes a Drip

Group Effort

Sometimes the only way to consider the unexplainable is to embrace the absurd. Artist Tom Chambers does this by creating provocative photomontages using animals and mythical elements to question the human experience. Photographing each element of the final image separately, Chambers scans the film, then uses editing software to assemble his works. Chambers is joined by Pamela Murphy—who uses forgotten figures in old photographs as the models in her eerie paintings—and more than 20 other artists in the Chase Young Gallery's Winter Group Show. Get swept up in something strange from Dec. 5–22.

HOME-COURT ADVANTAGE

Everything Old Is New Again

It was as if Professor Peabody told Sherman to set the WABAC Machine to the 1630s, when the Boston Tennis and Racquet Club teamed up with Plimouth Plantation for an evening entitled "A Good Match."

The event's focus on 17th-century sport and food included a game of court tennis and a buffet prepared by food historian Kathleen Wall, which included "peascods" (little pies), "pears in broth" (which are actually meatballs), something called Lumdardy tart (quite tasty) and a 1600s version of cheesecake. Guests could also try their luck at such popular pilgrim-era diversions as Nine Pins and Nine Man Morris, but most of them were too enthralled watching the exhibition match being played on the only court tennis setup in the region.

> The only negative: The cash bar didn't dial back the price of a gin and tonic by 400 years.

The archaic form of tennis requires handmade balls, special racquets, slate walls, a layout reminiscent of a palace courtyard and the ability to hit off the sides and back surfaces, while the players included the club's pro, U.S. Open winner and one-time No. 2 player in the world, Jimmy Burke, as well as Breton Hornblower, an avid Plimouth Plantation supporter (whose family donated their estate in Plymouth to create the museum).

Also on hand were the likes of proud mom Patsy Hornblower, Dave (no-relation-to-the-rock-star) Matthews, aspiring club member Afton Funk, board of trustees head honcho Steve Brodeur, the wildly entertaining Joanne Nikitas accompanied by the equally hilarious Paul Martin, blonde beauty Carolyn Wilde, and historian Vicki Oman, dressed in period garb.

The most curious remark: a very ladylike woman saying, "I won't kiss you hello because I just finished smoking a cigar."

Breton Hornblower at the Tennis and Racquet Club

Afton Funk at the Tennis and Racquet Club

Vicki Oman at the Tennis and Racquet Club

Anja Manteuffel and Christian Warns at the Terezin Music Foundation gala

Nancy Edman Feldman and Dawn Upshaw at the Terezin Music Foundation gala

Ambassador W. J. Cabaniss and Mark Ludwig at the Terezin Music Foundation gala

Richard Ortner and Peter Wenders at the Terezin Music Foundation gala

Simone Dinnerstein and Nico Muhly at the Terezin Music Foundation gala

In short, the club hosted a most thoroughly entertaining evening, and the only negative thing there is to say is that the cash bar didn't dial back the price of a gin and tonic by 400 years.

There's an App for That

For a relatively intimate group (at least by Symphony Hall standards), there was a helluva lot of musical talent packed into the house when the Terezin Music Foundation hosted its 2012 gala.

The evening included a concert by opera super-star Dawn Upshaw and piano prodigy Simone Dinnerstein, performing a world premiere by boy-wonder composer Nico Muhly.

The organization, which celebrates the human spirit's resilience as reflected by the music and art created in the Terezin concentration camp, boasts such boosters as the evening's honoree, Samuel Bak, and his wife, Josee, cochairs Nancy Feldman and Cynthia Curme, music patron Peter Wender, Boston Conservatory head cheese Richard Ortner, mustachioed muchacho Avram Goldberg and the über-fabulous Carol, art dealer Bernie Pucker and the super-groovy Sue, eminence grise Michael Rotenberg and the flawless Karen, force of nature Sharon Rich, stunning blonde drama professor Barbara Grossman and her political heavyweight husband, Steve, French horn player Lisa Grenier, arts patron Alan Dynner, fashion plate Marcia Walsh, and a man who walked through the cocktail reception obliviously trailing a woman's cashmere shawl from his shoe. (It turned out to be Walsh's.)

The concert included music by Terezin prisoner Gideon Klein, as well as works by Charles Ives, Schumann, Bach and, of course, the piece commissioned from Muhly. Dinner followed, with Bak receiving a sculpture created by famed glass artists Sharon and Steven Weinberg. It's safe to say that everyone left thoroughly satisfied, except for the man who complained, "I'm missing Monday Night Football." ×××

ORIGINALLY CRAFTED FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Named after the Holiday star, Stella Artois was first brewed as a holiday beer as a gift to the people of Leuven, Belgium. A golden lager in contrast to the popular dark ales of the time, its brilliant amber color illuminated holiday celebrations for generations thereafter. "Artois" acknowledges Sebastian Artois, the master brewer and owner of the brewery.

The IMPROPER

When Everybody Knows Your Name

The first time I recall feeling starstruck—really gawp-eyed, fanboy stupid—was at a book signing with English novelist Martin Amis. He read aloud, in tones of tranquil dignity, a spectacular piece of writing about erectile dysfunction. I assumed the audience was as floored as I was, but I wasn't capable of noticing. When I arrived at the front of the line, I couldn't even introduce myself, and I walked away feeling concussed.

Adam DeTour

So let me go on record to say that it's pretty damned exciting, possibly concussive, to hang out with Matt Damon and John Krasinski. The Improper is accustomed to flaunting celebrities on its covers; over the past 21 years, we've made a fetish of it. This issue, however, is a milestone in that we've never photographed both a reigning prince of television and one of the world's top box office stars at the same time. It's like Christmas came early, except this is already the holiday issue.

Of course, it's easy to be fooled into thinking that the essence of celebrity is the magazine cover, the flashbulb smile, the slobbers and slimings from the gastropods on TMZ. But, no. Thence go Kardashians. A very different genus of celebrity thrives outside the squawking tempest, one that doesn't so much suck at the media's teat as puff oxygen in the media's gasping face. These are the celebrities famous for actual accomplishments, like writing great movie scripts and nurturing them to the full flower of the art form. Celebrities like the gentlemen on the cover of this issue.

WINTER IS COMING

LET IT FAUX

EVEN IF THE WEATHER OUTSIDE ISN'T frightful, man-made flurries can still create the snow-globe effect. Weston Ski Track coats its two-kilometer cross-country loop with five barrel-size snow guns that pump water directly from the Charles River. "You can't always predict how much snow will fall on a given winter, so we make what we can and take the natural snow as a bonus," says snowmaker Nate Stetson. Two-man teams groom the machine-made flakes, which have a more uniform structure than those found in nature. And when the degrees drop, the guns run for 24 hours per day. "We're the training base for most of the eastern and middle Massachusetts cross-country high school teams. Coming here, they know they can train all season. Even if there's no snow."

Good Eats

LITTLE DIPPERS

If following up a meal of bruschetta and pasta with a plate of frittelles crosses your carb limit, just file it away as a holiday indulgence. At Belmont's Il Casale, chef/co-owner Dante de Magistris fries spoonfuls of ricotta-based batter in oil until the pieces are puffy, crisp and golden. The egg-shaped fritters, light as soufflés, are the Venetian equivalent of beignets or churros, and arrive with a snowy dusting of powdered sugar and rum-spiked chocolate-espresso sauce. At his original restaurant, Dante, he adds ramekins of raspberry sauce, salted caramel and ginger anglaise. If you're going to break rules, you might as well do it with taste.

Hoppy Endings

Champagne is so 2012. Instead, spring for these local alternatives that'll really make the season bright. JENNIFER JACKSON

Sam Adams Infinium (BOSTON, MA) 10.3 PERCENT ABV After a two-year collaboration with Weihenstephan (the oldest running brewery in the world), Sam Adams released this Champagne-style beer. Following the centuries-old German beer purity laws, Infinium contains only water, malt, hops and yeast, but the fermentation process allows for a fine carbonation and high alcohol content similar to its sparkling cousin. $30 AT BLANCHARD'S, 103 HARVARD AVE., ALLSTON (617-782-5588) BLANCHARDS.NET

Enlightenment Ales Enlightenment Brut (LOWELL, MA) 11 PERCENT ABV The first beer from founder Ben Howe's nano-brewery, Enlightenment Brut bière de Champagne is just as sophisticated as its French counterpart, without the need for flutes. Dry and effervescent, spiced and delicate, this fanciful brew suits those looking to buzz in the New Year with a bit of wild American spirit. $18.70 AT CHARLES STREET LIQUORS, 143 CHARLES ST., BOSTON (617-523-5051) CSLIQUORS.COM

Farnum Hill Dooryard Cider (LEBANON, NH) 7.5 PERCENT ABV Sure, the holidays are about indulgence, but why not throw in a lighter option? Farnum Hill hard ciders are gluten-free, and they range in styles from sweet and fizzy to dry and complex. It's a rustic option, yet wholly refined. $16.50 $22.95 AT BLANCHARD'S, 103 HARVARD AVE., ALLSTON (617-782-5588) BLANCHARDS.NET

Carlson Orchards New England McIntosh Sparkling Cider (HARVARD, MA) NON-ALCOHOLIC Carlson's non-alcoholic cider is a great option for tots, teens and teetotalers. Plus it contains no additional sweeteners or preservatives, so you can leave the guilt for that extra helping of figgy pudding. $4.69 AT WHOLE FOODS MARKET, 15 WESTLAND AVE., BOSTON (617-375-1010) WHOLEFOODSMARKET.COM

FRESH STARTS

On stopping, chopping and shopping

IT MAY NOT HAVE shuttered for keeps, but the closing of Tavern on the Water in Charlestown marked more than a change of seasons this year. "We had a good run," says Chris Damian of the Legendary Restaurant Group. "Our lease was up, and in the last 120 days we've opened up four new restaurants. A seasonal restaurant is not representative of what we're doing anymore." Instead, Damian and partner Brad Dalbeck plan to focus on expanding their current brands—including the new Burger Dive and a second Papagayo set to open in Somerville's Assembly Row next year.

ALTHOUGH BOSTON CHOPS WON'T open until late January or early February, chef/co-owner Christopher Coombs and co-owner Brian Piccini (Dbar, Deuxave) have already assembled a top-tier team for the front of the house. Kate Moore (veteran of L'Espalier and, most recently, Bistro du Midi) has been named beverage director and sommelier for the forthcoming South End establishment. Kevin Murphy (formerly of Excelsior) will be general manager. Both hires, says Coombs, "add another amazing dimension to what should be a pretty decent restaurant."

FINALLY, IF YOU'RE STILL SEEKING that perfect gift, here's a suggestion: Treat yourself and your giftee to two seats to the Greater Boston Food Bank's Super Hunger Brunch Jan. 26–27. Depending on the restaurant, tickets run from $25 to $50 apiece for a full brunch at hot spots such as Rialto and Hamersley's. You can buy gift certificates at the GBFB website. What could be easier or more delicious?

First Taste

SOUTHERN COMFORTS

Brian Poe has a taste for the South. In fact, the chef/owner of the Tip Tap Room now has a whole restaurant devoted to it. Poe joins executive chef Eric Gburski (formerly of the East Coast Grill) and Gordon Wilcox of the Wilcox Hospitality Group (Parish Cafe, Lower Depths) at Estelle's, a Southern-style restaurant just opened in the South End.

Estelle's name comes from an old nightclub/restaurant that enjoyed a long and lively history in Roxbury. Evoking the sentiment of a homey hangout, Wilcox asked the original owner's son if he could borrow the name, hoping to bring together the surrounding neighborhoods over good food and drink. That, after all, is how the trio behind Estelle's originally bonded. "[Poe and Gburski] have a symbiotic relationship to begin with, and I just took advantage of it," says Wilcox. "We're all mutual friends, and we all have a love of Southern food.

For Poe, an Alabama native, Southern cuisine comes naturally. "It's a vital part of the way I cook," he says. "Eric, he's got the style to bring that forward and make it modern." Patrons at the 70-plus-seat Estelle's can order from a menu heavily influenced by Poe's step-grandmother, Leaty Drake. "There's a lot of history," adds Gburski. "We're taking Southern cuisine, and it being a simple style of food, we're continuing to maintain that." Homestyle dishes include chicken fried steak and Ms. Leaty's cheesy grits, made with molasses-grilled banana and candied pecans. Gburski's also excited about the spicy-smoked chicken liver deviled eggs and the braised pork shank, served with tasso ham-lemon relish and mashed sweet potatoes. The team is working on a spiked sweet tea as well, something like white sangria with a Southern twist.

Estelle's radiates Southern hospitality. It serves weekend brunch and keeps the kitchen open, and beer and wine flowing, until 2 am nightly. "By bringing this menu along, we're going to be able to invite everybody in," says Gburski. "There's a lot of diversity here, and we're trying to give them another house to be welcomed at and enjoy being a part of."

Q&A

CEDDY BEAR

Comedian and star of TV Land's The Soul Man, Cedric the Entertainer plays the Wilbur Theatre on Dec. 30.

Where did your comedy career start?
In St. Louis, when I started booking the Funny Bone comedy clubs. The culture back then was you had to work your way in to be invited to do the shows and tour. So once they said that I could tour, I actually quit my job. That was '88, maybe '89.

Has your comedy evolved?
I think that as you start doing it, you just do a lot of physical stuff. Then I started to trust writing and looking at things that I wouldn't necessarily see as comedy. It evolved into being able to understand my voice and say the things that I want to say the way I want to say them. Hopefully they translate into good comedy and not offensive statements.

Are you constantly writing?
Definitely. But stand-up is a young man's sport, the edginess of it, the danger. It's harder for veteran comedians to write jokes all the time. They usually just find things that are very important to them, that they like to write about, that they like to talk about, and then that's the stuff that they add to their show. Everything else is just commentary on daily life. If you come across a diamond in the rough, then alright, cool, you call that writing. But usually it's just you kind of winging stuff off the top of your head.

Why the name Cedric the Entertainer?
I come from long line of entertainers. My grandfather, Ezra the Entertainer, he's from a small village of—no, I don't know. I used to just perform as Cedric. Then I was at a show, and the guy introduced everybody as "the next comedian." Well, I didn't really have a lot of jokes. I used to sing, I'd do poems—the more time you did the more money you got. So when the guy called me a comedian, I said, "Don't call me a comedian. Call me an entertainer."

HEALTH KICK

NAME: Beet of Life

PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: Bar manager Teodora Bakardzhieva

INGREDIENTS: Bacardi Silver infused with fresh beets. Also, fresh lime juice, simple syrup, mint.

SO IT'S A MOJITO WITH BEETS: "Everybody said it sounded like a horrible idea!" laughs Bakardzhieva. "But then they go and tell their friends."

HORRIBLE IDEA? No. The taste is similar to a mojito, but with an earthy undertone. The beets also add a subdued sweetness, completely unreminiscent of a salad. It's refreshing and light, and looks seasonally festive due to its opulent blood-red hue.

CONCEIT: "A lot of people drink fruity drinks, but it's hard to convince people to drink something really healthy with alcohol," says Bakardzhieva. "We were looking for a cocktail with a healthy vegetable."

HEALTH BENEFITS: Beta-carotene and fiber, not to mention it helps detoxify the liver (a useful trick for a cocktail). "Beets are used in antidepression medications," says Bakardzhieva. "And the ancient Romans used to eat it before battle."

SANTA, BABY

Before he does the rounds on Christmas Eve, Saint Nick makes public appearances throughout December. But what are the requirements for being the guy with the holiday spirit and ZZ Top facial hair? From malls to house calls, here's a breakdown of local Kris Kringles.

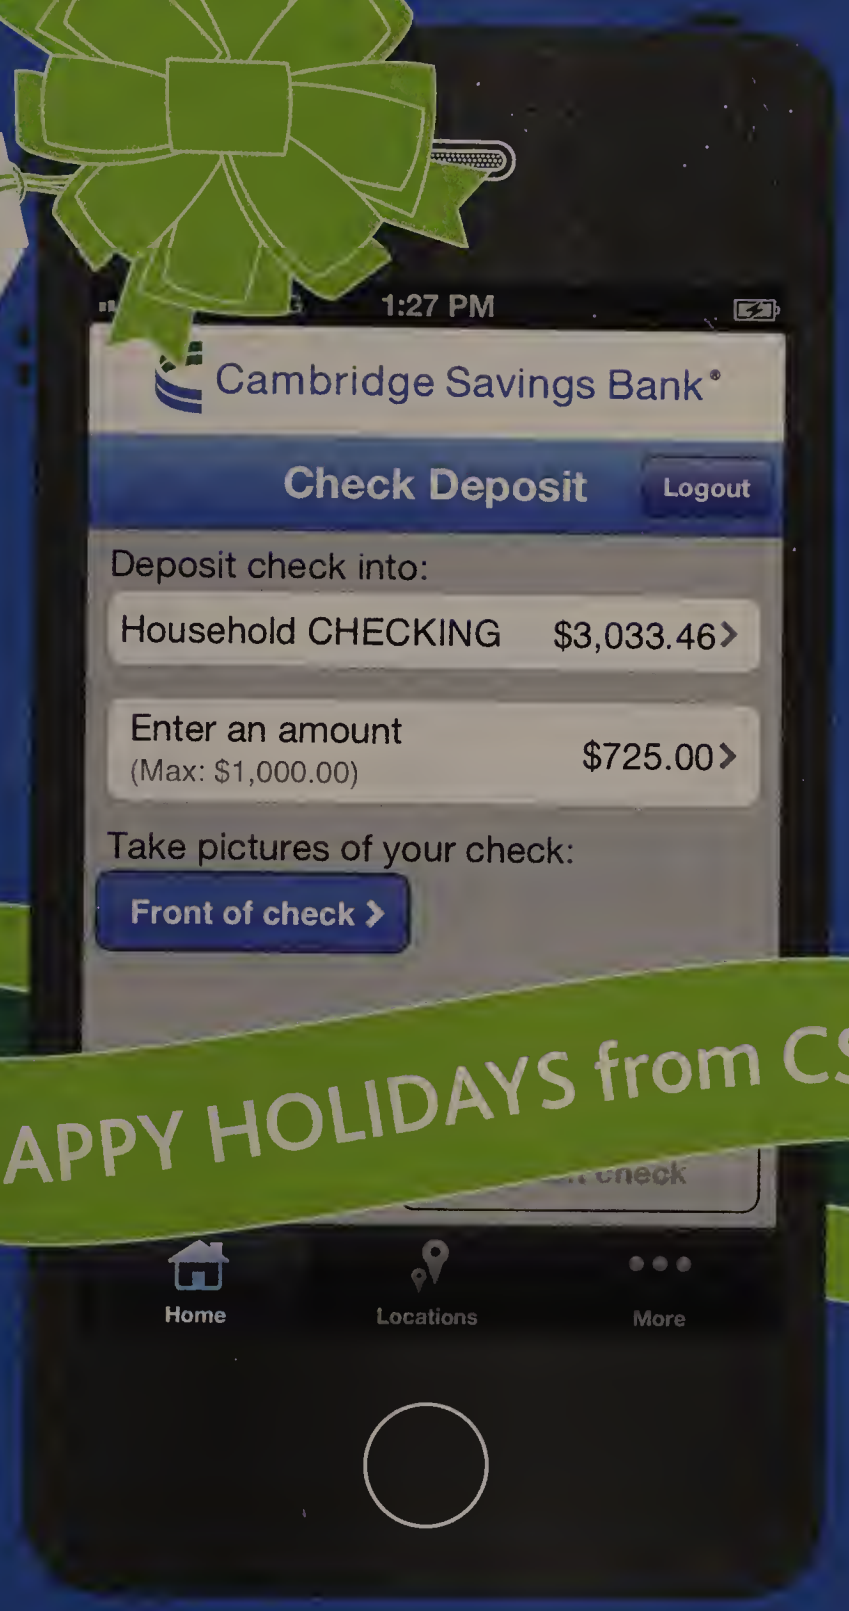
HELPING HAND

TO THE COUPLE WHO LOOKED AFTER MY ILL PARTNER IN MIRACLE OF SCIENCE WHILE I GOT MY CAR: Thank you for your compassion and concern. And also for going beyond a stranger's call of duty by continuing to grasp her hand as she got sick in the street. That sort of kindness lingers long after the symptoms go away.

An appreciative partner

To all Boston shoppers:
Be nicer to us sales associates. We're on your team. Yes, we can be pushy, but sometimes we haven't seen a customer in two hours, and we're just excited for some actual human contact. Also, don't trash the dressing rooms. Would you leave your or your friend's closet like that? If you answered yes, you're a monster.

A very exhausted sales associate



To Christina Aguilera:
Please put some pants on. I understand an artist feels the need to exercise his or her freedom of expression whenever possible, but choosing not to wear pants on a network TV singing competition is unfair to the audience. Also, may I suggest some traditional exercise as well? Perhaps then your pantslessness will be more appreciated!

For the java experts behind Barismo, the first stage of expansion was Dwelltime, the brew bar/bakeshop that arrived in Area Four earlier this year. Part two opens this month in their home base of Arlington. Having outgrown the original Mass. Ave. location, Barismo is setting up shop down the block with a much larger venue. One side of the space will house the roasting and production operation, with a sampling station for experimenting with different beans and preparations. The other side holds a coffee bar, complete with seating—a major upgrade to their current standing-room-only situation. Offering pour-overs and beans by the pound, Barismo has coffee geeks buzzing in anticipation.

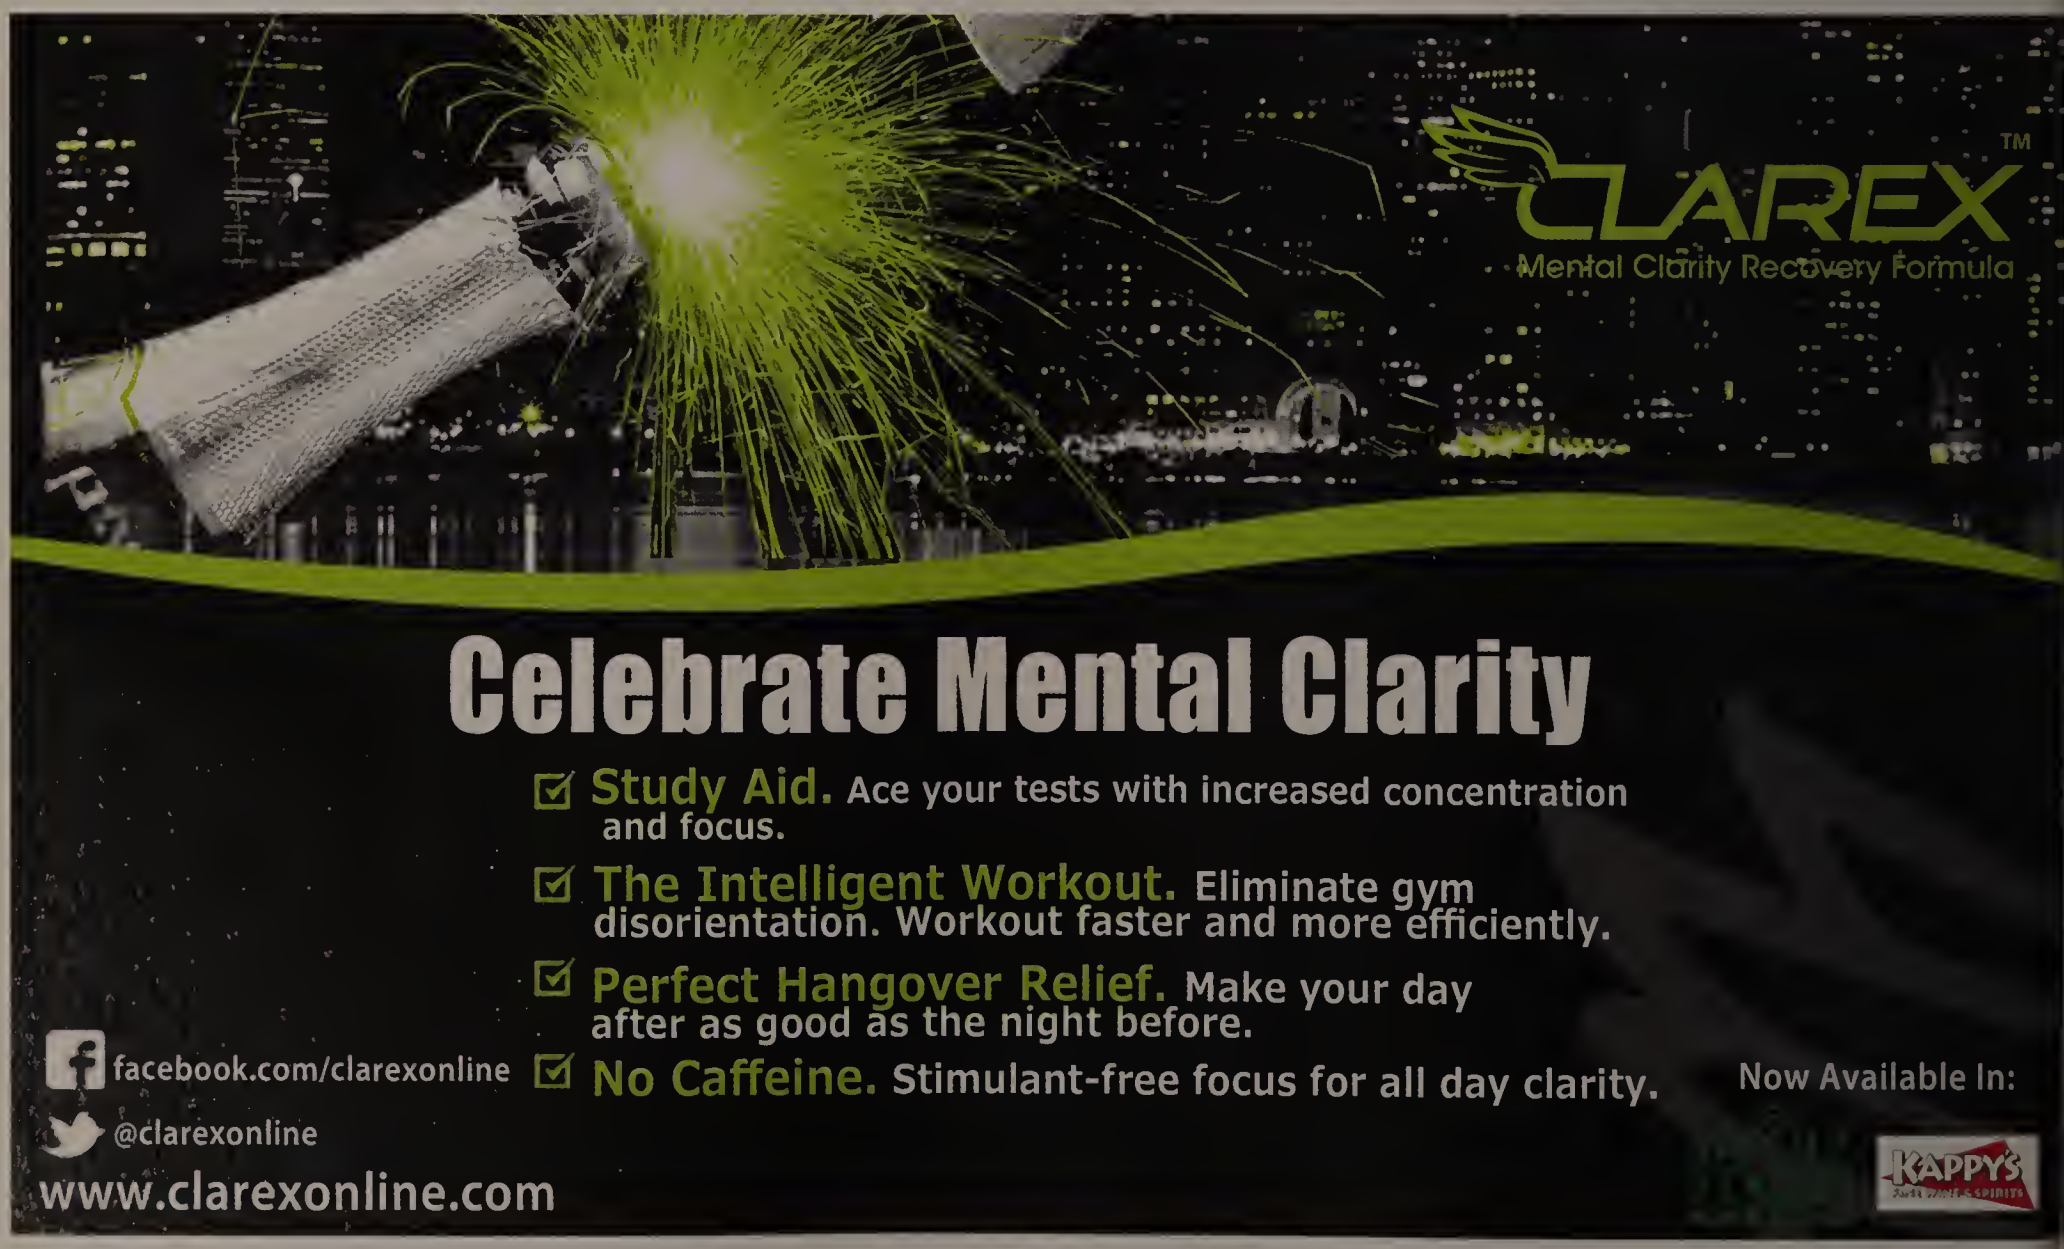
ABOUT A BOY

An autistic child comes to life in this novel about a friendship between two women.

THROUGH A MISTY, almost mystical confluence, two women come together over a boy with autism. Olivia, the mother of Anthony, who died at age eight, and Beth, a writer who finds herself somehow channeling the voice and spirit of this child, form a bond.

As "he" plangently narrates his desperate, literal-minded need for order and for things that come in threes ("Three Little Pigs"; the specific number of French toast sticks on his plate), we feel his realness, even though he has trouble connecting to the broader world. But Anthony's difficult outer life of hand-flapping and avoidance of eye contact belies a rich inner life.



Love Anthony
by Lisa Genova

Genova lives on Cape Cod.

Set on Nantucket, the story follows Olivia and Beth as they mourn the dissolution of their marriages. Genova uses her protagonists' connection to both the real and fictional Anthony to gracefully show how their friendship flowers. Along the way, Anthony comes across as pained, precise and constrained, but yearning like the rest of us, and very sympathetic. There's wonderful tension as Beth and Olivia move toward clasping the mutual mystery of how they respectively plunged into the heart of a "differently lovable" boy. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 217: When she notices a child with autism now, like this cute little boy sitting at the table, she feels a compassionate connection, a softness in her heart, like they're friends who share an intimate secret. Before she began writing her book, she would have looked at this boy and thought "He seems odd. Something's wrong with that boy." And then she would've intentionally looked away. Now she smiles as she watches him and thinks I know it's way too loud in here. I want to get out of here, too."

CITY LIGHTS

Modern luxuries in Soho and nights in the Meatpacking District

WINDOW SEATS The James New York's stylish Sky Lobby

LUXURY IN NEW YORK CAN take any form. The worn literary fug of the Algonquin, the Pacific lacquer of the Trump Tower, a full-price cup of coffee at the Russian Tea Room. In Soho, the height of luxury is very literally at Jimmy, the rooftop bar at the James Hotel. Loosely envisioned as an upscale 1970s lounge, its blue upholstery, modular seating, outdoor pool and fireplaces are a glittery backdrop for glittery New Yorkers. But the swooping 360 degree view, spanning from river to river with an eyeful of Wall Street, make you feel like a privileged eagle. Add a cocktail crafted with house-infused bitters and pressed juices, and you've hit the city's summit.

An ideal day in the neighborhood begins and ends at the James, which appears to have been built for the purpose of marrying clean, modern aesthetics with a commitment to high thread counts. Rooms are unfussy, with dark woods and custom, contemporary furniture. There're rain showers and free Wi-Fi, but the most notable in-room feature is a painted screen that automatically lowers over the bathroom's transparent wall. Showing a tree formed by lines of computer code, it's a composition by Dutch artist Nienke Sybrandy. The James is indeed glutted with original art. The wall of the foyer is covered in a mosaic of recycled keyboard keys that invite running your fingers on the worn plastic; the third-floor glass Sky Lobby boasts unique pieces of furniture—some of which look like they've escaped from MoMa—curated by Brad Pitt's decorator. Each corridor, in fact, showcases the work of a different local artist.

There's artistry aplenty, too, in David Burke Kitchen, the basement restaurant. Taking the farm-to-table conceit earnestly, wooden ceiling beams lend

Traveler's Checks

For more affordable lodgings, the bargain-priced Yotel in Midtown has ingeniously-designed modern rooms, retractable beds and amenities like multiple bars, an Asian-fusion restaurant and a fitness center. There's even a robotic "concierge" for your luggage. The catch: tight, cabin-like spaces reminiscent of high-tech veal crates. It's such a popular conceit, though, that the British chain is planning a second U.S. location here in Boston.

Remember, fashionable New Yorkers don't dine before 9 pm, so those empty tables next to you will fill up by dessert.

the room a barn-like touch, while portraits of the restaurant's purveyors posing with their prize chickens, lobsters and future filets remind guests that fine dining involves rubber gloves and a concrete drain. The menu's whimsical compositions like maple bacon dates with peanut butter are grounded by more traditional interpretations of black sea bass and lamb chops.

You could spend days trawling Soho's designer boutiques, but when your credit cards overheat, steer up Hudson Street towards the Meatpacking District for creative bespoke cocktails and stellar brasserie cuisine at the Vinatta Project. This is the sort of restaurant that should drive Boston scenesters to throw bricks at our city's licensing board. Black leather banquettes, a hammered tin ceiling and a huge enoteca machine draw the eye, but it's the menu that's worth an extra moment's appreciation. If bartender's choice is too risky for your taste, pick a spirit and one or two ingredients from a list (plum, Thai chili, etc.) and select an adjective (dry, peaty). You won't go wrong with "gin, rosemary, refreshing." The wild mushroom beignets with truffles shouldn't be missed, and it's no exaggeration to say that the 48 oz. porterhouse for two would make a Platonic last supper if your idea of bliss involves several pounds of meat, dry aged to an umami crescendo and seared medium rare. Which it ought.

After dinner, cross the block to Toy for a digestif and '80s tunes. Sporting considerable neon, a fractured ceiling mirror and a menu of punch bowls, it's a fun escape from the more affected New York clubs. Watch the crowd from the mezzanine, or escape the throb at a second-floor table and order dim sum or a Cantonese whole fish.

The next morning, head back to the crime scene and ask for a corner table next door at Bagatelle. For several years, this French Mediterranean bistro has been the focal point of Manhattan's excessive brunches. It's a place of white marble, magnums and sparklers fizzing in oversized desserts. Waiters are accented and Champagne is mandatory, while the DJs—like everything else—seem to carry a premium price tag. Revel in the spectacle of Euros quaffing Moët over poached eggs and paddlefish caviar, and make sure you tip the bathroom attendant.

This isn't Kansas, after all. ×××

Waban Kitchen

HOLY ORDER Filet of mackerel is balanced by curried cauliflower.

AS IF IN A FRIENDLY challenge to Farmstead Table just down Beacon Street, Waban Kitchen has joined the competition of lovely little local eateries. Occupying the space formerly graced by Kouzina, an estimable Greek boîte, this latest undertaking by chef Jeffery Fournier of 51 Lincoln boasts big flavors, tantalizing textures and an ambience of bonhomie.

My first taste of steak tartare ($11), served with hot, hand-cut French fries, confirmed the kitchen's serious intentions. Comprised of lean, full-flavored Wagyu beef enriched with egg yolks, blended with minced onions, capers, olive oil and an aromatic, savory combination of herbs, Fournier's rendering of this classic was simply the best I've ever tasted. I'm no fan of oversized portions, but I could've eaten another plate of this masterpiece—a dish that Joy of Cooking calls the "cannibal mound."

Another delicious starter, tempura of crimini mushrooms ($9), lightly battered, flash fried and served with a sweet-spicy dipping sauce, made a delightfully delicate counterpoint to the robust tartare. Another winner was the charcuterie of the day, a tasty, sherry-infused chicken liver pâté ($6) that again showcased the chef's deft handling of herbs.

Main courses included a filet of fresh Spanish mackerel ($25), which had a strong but pleasant flavor nicely balanced by a garnish of roasted curried cauliflower and tapenade. A second seafood offering, Faroe Island salmon au poivre ($26), arrived rare as ordered, its texture and flavor impeccable. Okinawan yam puree and grilled frisée were imaginative, enjoyable accompaniments. The only lapse came when I ordered a dish the restaurant described as "Waban Kitchen's signature five-spice roasted chicken" ($24). Roast chicken is usually a bellwether, a revealing measure of the kitchen's skill and discipline. Uncharacteristically, Fournier's team dropped the ball, sending out an overcooked bird. But despite its dryness, the meat's five-spice flavor suggested the dish may eventually be worthy of "signature" status.

With the side dishes of sautéed baby spinach ($6) and roasted Brussels sprouts ($6), the kitchen regained its footing. The spinach, tender and resilient, was enhanced by garlic and lemon, while the sprouts, their natural bitterness mellowed by the dry heat of the oven, developed a sweetness complemented by smoky nuggets of pancetta.

The beverage choice at Waban Kitchen included a respectable selection of beers, among them a substantial, hoppy 21st Amendment Brew Free or Die IPA. The wine list, unfortunately bereft of lower-priced bottles, started the bidding at above $40. An excellent 2011 Mon Tes Twins malbec–cabernet sauvignon blend ($43) was fruity but full-bodied and well-structured. Desserts featured house-made pies (each $8), including a luscious sweet potato and a rich chocolate.

Waban Kitchen's small dining room was full on my visits, both on a Friday and during midweek. This popularity, combined with space limitations, can occasion uncomfortable waits for a table or seat at the bar. There is no vestibule, and the winter wind can assault the backs of patrons sitting near the door. But a little discomfort is a small price to pay for chef Fournier's culinary flair, the flavor he coaxes out of fresh, often local ingredients, and the grace and polish with which they're served by the attentive, informed and friendly waitstaff. This neighborhood kitchen is a serious contender. ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: MY FRIEND SAID SHE HAD A PUMPKIN PEEL. IS SHE KIDDING?

A: Try it; you'll love it! I recommend pumpkin peels when a mild exfoliation is indicated due to dry skin, a rough skin texture, or a listless complexion.

Pumpkin peels use the enzyme of the pumpkin to exfoliate and introduce vitamins and nutrients into the skin. Pumpkin peels smell great (think pumpkin pie!) and are perfect for this time of year. They contain over 100 nutrients including anti-oxidants such as vitamins A and C; beneficial minerals such as zinc; and several types of alpha hydroxy and natural acids.

Pumpkin peels are slightly milder than glycolic and lactic acid peels, are safe for sensitive skin, and leave the skin glowing and hydrated.

RUN AND HYDE

Hyde Park on Hudson ★★
Starring Laura Linney, Bill Murray, Olivia Williams, Samuel West, Olivia Colman and Elizabeth Marvel. Written by Richard Nelson. Directed by Roger Michell. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

THERE'S NOTHING QUITE so frustrating as watching history being made through the eyes of the least interesting person in the room. Following the soggy playbook of last year's equally dismissible My Week With Marilyn, director Roger Michell's Hyde Park on Hudson is supposed to chronicle the momentous first meeting of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Britain's King George VI, but all that's just background noise. Really, the movie is about how FDR's dowdy distant cousin (Laura Linney) had a schoolgirl crush on the commander in chief.

Working from the diaries of Daisy Suckley, who died at the age of 99 in 1991, Hyde Park on Hudson is a tedious affair about a tedious affair. An aging spinster summoned to the country estate owned by FDR's nagging mother, Daisy goes for long afternoon drives with the president, admires his stamp collection and eventually ends up giving him the ickiest on-screen handjob this side of The Master. There's also some issues with Germany, but that isn't allowed to distract us from the insipid Harlequin romance narration and Jeremy Sams' syrupy score.

Daisy's over the moon with girlish adoration, and watching the almost 50-year-old Linney carry on like an inarticulate, love-struck teenager makes us wonder if Daisy might have more problems than the film is letting on. She snipes competitively with FDR's secretary (Elizabeth Marvel) while his wife, Eleanor (Olivia Williams), is usually too busy with her furniture-making lady friends to pay much bother.

In a bit of casting that might best be described as improbable, Bill Murray plays FDR. While this easily could've come off as a long lost Saturday Night Live sketch, he's a canny enough actor to understand that we're never going to forget we're watching Bill Murray, so instead of trying a full-on impersonation he just keeps his chin tilted up and slightly affects an accent. It's a pretty good performance, with an impish wit and a fair amount of mystery preserved behind his smiling eyes.

The middle chunk of Hyde Park on Hudson is, for all intents and purposes, a mini-sequel to The King's Speech, concerning a visit from King George VI (Samuel West) and his wife, Elizabeth (Olivia Colman). The stammering "Bertie" is still uneasy on the throne, arriving hat in hand to solicit America's assistance in World War II. The film all too briefly becomes a comedy of manners, with both hosts and guests puzzling over logistics and formalities, as FDR insists on serving his royal guests hot dogs for lunch.

These are the most entertaining scenes in the picture, and they have nothing to do with Daisy. She's just standing out in the yard pining for the president while all the important stuff happens indoors. There's a boozy, late-night bull session between FDR and Bertie that's so perceptively written and performed, it seems to have been spliced in from a better movie.

Screenwriter Richard Nelson's lone clever conceit is that the two most powerful men in the free world bond over their secret infirmities, with both the king's stutter and the president's polio kept quiet by a press that once knew of restraint. "Can you imagine the disappointment when they find out what we are?" FDR asks with a sly smile, boosting Bertie's shaky confidence and offering the paternal support we learned he lacked in that other movie. (Lovely as this scene is, it's worth wondering if Hyde Park on Hudson will make any sense to viewers who haven't seen The King's Speech. I also must admit that this is the most I've thought about The King's Speech since I saw it and immediately forgot everything about it two years ago.)

Alas, we're soon back to Daisy's sappy romantic woes and the none-too-shocking revelation that she's not the only lucky lady to get an intimate look at the president's stamp collection. The ensuing petulant outbursts are of course overheard by the Brits, with a lot of silly door-slamming farce as the king tries to figure out exactly how many women his new pal is bedding down.

At best faintly amusing and determinedly pleasant, Hyde Park on Hudson is one of those golden-hued, awards-season films that'll probably play like gangbusters with seniors. Taking great pains to remain inoffensive, the movie wears its slightness on its sleeve. But I think even Daisy Suckley herself might wonder why anybody would want to make a movie about her. ✖✖✖

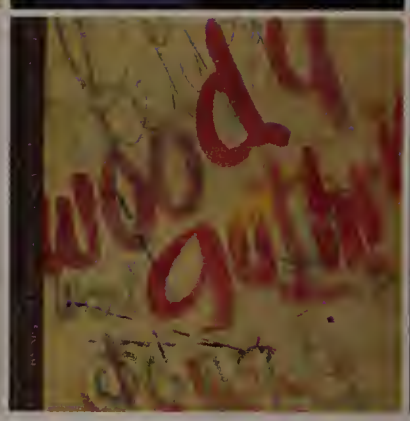
POP GOES ANOTHER YEAR

Here are my 10 album picks from 2012.



Frank Ocean, Channel Orange (Def Jam). Modern R&B finds a refreshing pulse in the stark depths of Ocean, who sings of chasing highs and plumbing lows—including his unrequited love for a man—on this brave debut. When the Kanye West/Jay-Z associate and Odd Future member pines in falsetto, it sounds like he's peeled open his heart.

Dr. John, Locked Down (Nonesuch). The New Orleans voodoo king resurrects his heady gumbo groove with Black Keys guitarist Dan Auerbach as producer. They cowrite with a loose-limbed, simpatico band that draws from Dap-Kings soul and Afrobeat, creating a sickbed to support the doctor's laid-back growl.

Fiona Apple, The Idler Wheel Is Wiser... (Epic). Raw nerves unfurl anew in Apple's confessional ruminations, made all the more pointed with sparse arrangements around her piano and coproducer Charley Drayton's percussion. "I just want to feel everything," she sings at the outset—and that's quite a range to share.

Jack White, Blunderbuss (Third Man). Freed of commitments to the White Stripes and subsequent bands, White blasts away under his own name, spinning gothic songcraft that straddles rock, blues and country, building his persona without losing the mystique.

Tame Impala, Lonerism (Modular). The alpha in this herd of young Aussie voyagers, Kevin Parker clomps through phase-shifted psychedelic pastures steeped in analog synths and Beatles-esque harmonies. Producer Dave Fridmann gives the magical mystery tour a sheen that recalls his work for the Flaming Lips and MGMT.

Bob Dylan, Tempest (Columbia). His concerts can be a crapshoot, but at age 71, America's folk-rock bard remains at home in the studio, his craggy voice fitting his ornery lyrics. The album culminates in a 14-minute recitation about the Titanic and an ode to John Lennon, daunting moves for anyone who's not Dylan.

Japandroids, Celebration Rock (Polyvinyl). "We yell like hell to the heavens," the maximalist Vancouver duo shouts on the lead track of their sophomore album, an unabashed rush of adrenalized garage-punk that compels listeners with infectious physicality. A more established producer might better define the blunt churn of noisy guitar and chaotic drums, but that could disrupt the thrust. Japandroids' gnashing glee embodies youthful abandon.

Gary Clark Jr., Blak and Blu (Warner Brothers). The latest hot gunslinger from Stevie Ray Vaughan's hometown of Austin, Texas, takes aim at a new generation. Clark proves he can sing as well as sting across a palette of blues, rock, soul and even hip-hop on this slickly produced yet grittily potent full-length debut.

Jay Farrar/Will Johnson/Anders Parker/Yim Yames, New Multitudes (Rounder). Indie-folk friends, including frontmen from Son Volt and My Morning Jacket, craft music and moods around Woody Guthrie lyrics, forging an apt centennial tribute. Lines between the players blur as they equally split songwriting and harmonies through forays in sepia-toned melancholy and woolly rock riffs.

Esperanza Spalding, Radio Music Society (Concord). This Berklee-bred bassist/singer snagged jazz's first Best New Artist Grammy before she even dropped this impeccably crafted crossover dream. If only smooth jazz were this sophisticated. Masters Joe Lovano and Jack DeJohnette nod to Stevie Wonder and Steely Dan while hip-hop avatar Q-Tip hones beats, and producer Spalding soars like a bird with her airy vocals. Considering she began as an instrumentalist, watch out when she develops her songwriting. ×××

An elegiac turn for my annual list of raves

A SURPRISING TREAT from 2012 is the bookstore in the Delta shuttle terminal at Logan. I stopped in there recently, waiting for a delayed flight after the cattle-call nightmare of the security line (where we all know that we're guilty of something). I love bookstores of all kinds, and feel we all have a stake in keeping them alive. Usually, airport bookstores are places where salespeople just ring up the registers, caring little or nothing about their goods. This store is a joy and delight. It's managed by Juan Barcia, assisted by six women who know and love books, and are excited by authors and ideas. People you'd be happy to work with, or for. It makes the Delta shuttle an oasis in the middle of insult and inefficiency. Stop in if you're in the terminal. You'll wish these ladies ran the airline, not the bookstore.

But my list this year is really more obituaries than raves. Not for people, but for institutions that died in 2012. Let's start with the late, great Locke-Ober restaurant. Almost every column I've read about its demise was pretty bland, plain vanilla for a place that always shone in Technicolor. Joe DiMaggio courted Marilyn Monroe in a private room upstairs. The great editors of publishing were regulars, from The Boston Globe to Little Brown, Houghton Mifflin and The Atlantic Monthly. Once upon a time, we were a great publishing town and a lousy restaurant town. Now it's turned upside down—lousy literary, great restaurants. I'd vote for the old days. Editors table-hopped at Locke's, swapped ideas, did deals, got drunk, made new friends. It was a plum pudding of romantic and madcap plans. And at the end, there was nothing left but ghosts, and the only remnant of the "right stuff" was Weiner schnitzel. I got engaged at Locke's on Christmas Eve; the ring buried in a covered dish of peas.

I've witnessed dinner plates skated out of third floor windows into the alley below, strippers at investment firm Christmas celebrations. Locke's hosted birthday parties for my children and my wife. Both of my sons celebrated their 21st birthdays there with lobster Savannah. My sister tossed a Champagne bottle at my best friend during a private party, and, until this year, I attended a Christmas lunch in a private room with the same 10 friends, boisterous merriment starting at noon and often ending in a mad bumper-car chase to Bonwit Teller to buy presents for our wives.

Sound childish and irresponsible? You bet. But I never wanted to wait for retirement to be childish and irresponsible.

I'll miss the chicken salad and the great Roquefort dressing, the lamb chops, the martinis shaken ice cold and straight up, the social-butterfly novelist George Higgins holding court with flair. George W.W. Brewster—the best dressed man in Boston—charming the room. And the hash. And the baked Alaska. Locke-Ober was a club open to the good, the bad and the ugly, as long as you had some style.

In an upstairs room years ago, a friend of mine found a first edition of Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby. As for the old Locke's, like many other green lights at the end of the dock, it's out of reach.

The Casablanca bar and restaurant also shuttered recently. This was, for years, one of the great bars anywhere, downstairs from the Brattle Theatre. It had, in my view, the most eclectic songs in its jukebox. Nina Simone's "I Loves You, Porgy," "Money Honey" by the Drifters, every great Sinatra make-out song, occasional Gilbert and Sullivan tunes, obscure songs from Ruddigore and Patience, numbers from original Hasty Pudding shows or the Raunch Hands with early Joan Baez. Name your poison, they'd play it or pour it. The lighting was dim, the right corner side of the bar was unspoken gay territory. The long front side was great, and the pours were always generous. Eventually, some genius sprinkled wicker seats for two around the room. These seats were built to surround the guests with a hooded top, assuring some special privacy. And it did, except, if you were nosy, you could dimly see all sorts of Harvard Square notables canoodling in the dark. I miss the planter's punch, and the jukebox.

I miss canoodling. And I miss the Casablanca. ×××

RATION AIL

The menu du jour for the apocalypse

ACCORDING TO A RECENT New York Times story, the survivalist movement is gaining steam. Advocates of preparedness might not own an arsenal or worry about Mayan predictions, but they nonetheless harbor a fear that civilization could end any day now. So they stockpile food just in case. In fact, one of the popular survival-food companies, Mountain House, offers a five-pound bucket of freeze-dried supplies that it calls the "Just in Case" bucket. In case of what? In case of a snack attack, duh! And also, nuclear war.

I'm not immune to this paranoid-yet-logical urge to hoard disaster supplies. In the bottom of my bureau, I keep a pair of unopened, brand new J.Crew boxers. In the back of my mind, I'm comforted knowing that when the barbarian hordes are charging over the horizon, a remnant of civilization will exist in my underwear drawer.

But a man can't live on underpants alone, so I decide to see what life would be like were I forced to eat doomsday rations. To dip my toe in the survivalist waters, I purchase one day's worth of supplies from the camping section of Dick's Sporting Goods. Well, most of it comes from Dick's. I discover my dessert, an Astronaut-brand ice-cream sandwich, in the checkout line of Old Navy. Old Navy: Buy a hoodie, prepare for the end of days!

> If zombies are knocking on your door, and this is all you have to eat, just let them in.

For breakfast, I'll have huevos rancheros from Backpacker's Pantry. For lunch, pad Thai. For dinner, I select chili mac with beef from Mountain House. All of these meals are freeze-dried in pouches, and Mountain House recently tested food it packaged in 1982 and found it still sorta tasty. Perhaps not quite as good as new, but what do you want for food that predates the Thriller album?

I begin my day with the most ambitious dish, the huevos. The pouch reads, "dried egg mix with red beans, chilies, onions, peppers and cheese." Mmm, Backpackers Pantry—you had my mouth watering at "dried egg mix." I add water, blend everything and let it sit for 10 minutes so the beans rehy-drate. Then I scramble the concoction on the stove and douse it with Cholula, which I've decided I'll definitely feature in my doomsday pantry. I'm sure everyone's emergency stockpile varies, but mine would include a lot of hot sauce and wine.

I sample a forkful of huevos, and my taste buds revolt against the onslaught of sensory confusion. The dish before me smells like eggs but looks like couscous and has a texture like wet chalk. I choke down about half a bowl. If zombies are knocking on the door, and this is all you have to eat, just let them in.

Lunch is more successful. The pad Thai includes separate pouches of peanut butter and peanuts, which seems a little like cheating. But I'm not complaining. I squeeze the peanut butter into the pouch, mix in boiling water and wait about 20 minutes. The noodles are a little rubbery, and the sauce is a multihued paste, but the overall taste is passable. I eat all of the noodles and some of the sauce, but still throw most of it down the drain. The survivalist diet might be great for your beach bod, if there are still beaches.

Perhaps by dinnertime I'm just ravenous, or maybe it's the wine I've uncorked, but the Mountain House chili mac is delicious. Though it's not delicious enough to stave off my jealousy that everyone else is eating pork stew with sweet potatoes, garlic bread and real ice cream while I gnaw on my Styrofoam astronaut sandwich. But it's good enough that I think you'd be excited for chili mac night in the ol' bunker.

Based on my admittedly limited one-day experience, I conclude that the worst survival foods are the ones that are trying too hard. Look, you're locked in your panic room waiting for the radiation to subside—you've got enough trouble without choking down some sad huevos rancheros that are just egg-like enough to remind you that all the chickens were eaten by the slime mutants. So grab a handful of trail mix, and reconcile yourself to the fact that your favorite brunch place was vaporized by fascist robots from outer space. Jamie Mammano isn't walking through that door, and if he is, you'd better make sure he's not Zombie Jamie Mammano looking for ingredients for Zombie Mistral's new all-brains menu.

For my part, I intend to resume my strategy of being completely unprepared for massive calamity. If civilization ends, I don't want to be locked in a bunker with a crate of astronaut ice cream, wondering if I'll ever see another episode of Homeland. I guess I'll take my chances. When the asteroid blots out the sun, at least I'll be wearing new underwear. ✖✖✖ is overrated."

"The universe

Soroff On STEVEN WRIGHT

The iconic comedian deadpans on the subjects of irony, the universe and Uma Thurman.

ACADEMY AWARD–WINNING COMEDIAN STEVEN WRIGHT, 57, is known for his laconic delivery and offbeat observations that skewer perceived logic. He grew up in Burlington and graduated from Emerson College. In 1982, he made his first appearance on The Tonight Show, which was followed by appearances on Saturday Night Live and Late Night With David Letterman. In 1989, he earned an Oscar for The Appointments of Dennis Jennings, a short he starred in and cowrote. Since then, he's appeared in films like Reservoir Dogs, Natural Born Killers and the animated film The Swan Princess. His comedy albums have won two Grammy nominations, and he was the first inductee in the Boston Comedy Hall of Fame. Wright lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Are you an introvert?
Steven Wright: Yes. I'm an award-winning introvert. But I didn't go to the ceremony.

Are you as deadpan in real life as you are onstage?
First of all, I'm not in real life. Second of all, no, I'm not. I'm much more expressive. When I'm onstage, one of the reasons I'm so deadpan is that I'm trying to remember my act. It's like I'm doing an S.A.T. test. Even though what I'm saying is insane, it's important that I say it the right way.

One thing that gets you all riled up?
It's like the wiring between my emotions and my expression isn't connected like a regular person's. I can be throwing chairs in my head, and I'll look like I'm just walking through Stop & Shop.

Worst job you've ever had?
I worked in the Houghton Mifflin warehouse in Burlington, Mass., filling textbook orders in a giant building with no windows. It was weird because bells would go off for breaks and lunch. I packed a lot of Curious George books, and every time I see him, I'm jolted back there. I was 23, and one of the old guys there said, "Get out of here. Don't get stuck working here." Then the next job I had was shoveling snow off of rooftops in Aspen, Colo., which was a change of pace.

One thing you'd never make fun of?
I'd say the universe, but I think the universe is overrated.

Three adjectives to describe your comedy?
It's verbal. You can hear it. And let's see, what else can I say that won't say anything? If I didn't do it, there'd be a weird gap in all that time I was onstage or on TV.

Who do you think names nail polish colors?
Oh my God, that's one of the best questions I've ever heard. I'd say Harvey Keitel. I'm just going on a gut feeling.

Favorite knock-knock joke?
I don't like them. I resent being pressured into conversation.

Would you consider yourself neurotic, and does comedy come from a dark place?
I'm extremely neurotic, and personally, I think comedy should come from Rhode Island. You're causing me to think this way, by the way. I was just sitting here minding my own business when the phone rang.

So where do you keep your Academy Award?
A storage space in Bangkok.

Define irony.
No.

Is there any of your material that you've had to change because of advancements in technology?
I had to change a bit about watching a movie on a VCR. I told it one night, and some lady in the audience yelled, "VCR?!" But I went backward and switched it to a projector because she wasn't gonna control me.

Favorite memory of the old days at the Ding Ho?
The hanging out after with all the other comedians. The people, those guys, were just incredible, and each one was more insane than the next. Three of us driving to a show was funnier than the show itself.

Are farts intrinsically funny?
I have been told that by a ghost.

Ever literally wet yourself from laughing?
Yes, but not in the way you mean it.

Which joke of yours do people repeat to you the most?
It's a small world, but I wouldn't want to paint it.

What's the biggest difference between doing a movie and being onstage?
Doing a take in a movie is like doing a 20-second show. It's all these tiny little performances that you didn't write, and there's no audience. You know when a TV reporter is in another country, and the anchor asks them a question, and they stand there for 30 seconds looking insane because of the satellite delay? It's like that, except it feels like a year.

Name one person you would cross the street to meet.
Uma Thurman.

Is there a sitcom that makes you pause before changing channels?
I only watch Hogan's Heroes. It's the only thing besides documentaries that I watch on television. And to me, it counts as a documentary.

Do you think your comedy boils down to "this is all one colossal joke?"
Well, it's like there's an ongoing chaos. Civilization is doing its best to rein it in, but nobody knows what the hell is going on. Y'know, it's just sort of "OK, if we're driving down the road, you stay on that side, and I'll stay on this side. That seems like a good idea."

So were you the kid who colored outside the lines?
No. I was very determined to stay in there. I am way more sane than you might think. Part of me is so normal you'd be stunned. It just happens to be the part of me when I'm sleeping. ×××

THE HEADLINERS

A SUITE ON THE 31ST FLOOR OF THE WALDORF TOWERS IS A STUDY IN COSTLY SURFACES. CELESTE BLUE WALLPAPER, CABRIOLE LEGS, CURTAINS SLUNG IN DANGLING BROCADE. THE ARMCHAIRS ARE PLASHED IN OLD SILK, THE PRINTS ARE A-TROT WITH THOROUGHBREDS. IT IS, IN SHORT, A STAGE.

In a chair by the tea service, John Krasinski is talking with the fluid animation of an Ivy League grad bolstered by nine seasons of an international hit sitcom and a marriage to Emily Blunt.

"It's not about the control," he says, referring to the production of his new movie, Promised Land. "It was about the camaraderie."

As if on cue, one of the world's top box office draws—and Promised Land's costar and cowriter—arrives. Matt Damon is polite, even courtly, although his hair is shaved in a penal crop from reshoots on Neill Blomkamp's upcoming sci-fi flick, Elysium. After shaking hands he swerves towards the refreshments tray, his brow furrowed over the breakfast china.

"Did you try the coffee?" asks the voice of Jason Bourne.

"No, is it good?" replies the voice of Jim from The Office.

"Well, mine wasn't. Mine was really watered down. Maybe it came from the same pot.... We're about to find out." He sloshes it into a hotel issue cup. "No, no, no, no. This is much more rich."

"They give me the good stuff," laughs Krasinski. Rapidfire, Damon tosses shreds of muffin into his mouth and scoots up a chair.

"Awesome," he says. "I'm in."

PEOPLE DIDN'T EXPECT MATT Damon's second major cowriting credit to appear alongside the name of John Krasinski. "Matt and Ben" is as much of a pop culture cliché as "My boy's wicked smaht." Krasinski's former colleague on The Office, Mindy Kaling, made her name with those names, writing a play about how Good Will Hunting got made. But when the Internet started jabbering about an upcoming screenplay by Krasinski and Damon, it seemed like a natural match. Damon was a superstar, and by the second season of The Office, Krasinski had supplanted Barney Frank as Newton's favorite son—his eyebrow alone expresses as much submission to cosmic absurdity as Camus' Myth of Sisyphus. And hometown ties count.

Krasinski says that when Damon and Blunt had been filming The Adjustment Bureau together, "Emily had been spewing Boston knowledge. Boston fun facts and how much I was a Boston guy. Matt thought that was hilarious, that a Brit was holding the flag for our favorite city. By the time I met him, we just dove into discussing the Red Sox and the Pats and all these different places that we grew up."

"You have a common frame of reference," says Damon. "You end up seeking out people from back home because they just understand you in ways other people can't." He laughs. "John does a good Boston accent, too."

Double-dates ensued. "We make plans for going out for dinner, and it always ends as much more," says Krasinski. "Sometimes we'd get wild and go straight to karaoke."

Shared background and career is a solid basis for a partnership, and soon the two actors were talking about putting their laptops together for a screenplay. Krasinski had adapted Brief Interviews With Hideous Men by David Foster Wallace for film, but he'd never penned a narrative of his own. "I had a burning idea of talking about where we are as a people, as opposed to where we've been led," he says. "No matter what happens in Washington or anywhere, we're losing sight of the people being affected. I brought that idea to Matt, and he immediately connected with it."

Damon's antennae for social justice are famously sensitive—the man's responsible for introducing the name Howard Zinn into the popular lexicon, after all. Over dinner, Krasinski floated the idea for a script, and soon the pair was spinning narrative threads. The theme for this rousing, populist entertainment: wind turbines.

"We found ourselves scouting locations, and we realized we had bad intel," laughs Damon. It turned out, wind power wasn't a locus for controversy, or even for drama. "We kind of built the house of our dreams on a clay foundation." So Krasinski hit on the idea of transplanting the characters and storyline to the more topical soil of fracking, the extraction of natural gas from shale by injecting chemicals into the ground. This was the grist around which their script would coalesce. It would be a story about small towns and big business painted in the American textures of unfurling farmlands, town hall showdowns and characters of quirk. So between February and August of last year, the pair regularly met at Damon's kitchen table to plot it out.

"It was a lot like working with Ben," says Damon. "It didn't ever feel like work. You could never tell who wrote what. I remember that happening with Ben. When Good Will Hunting came out, in large part because I played a character who was smarter than his character, people said to me, 'Did you really write more of the script?'" He laughs. "I couldn't tell you what I wrote in that script."

There were differences from hanging out with Affleck, of course. "Matt would be asking a question or acting out a line, and then someone would just crawl up his back and another person would just crawl up his arm," says Krasinski. (Damon's function as a climbing wall comes from now being a father of four.)

"Our writing sessions were often interrupted by the need for me to give a piggyback ride or go get somebody a glass of milk," says Damon. But, "I don't think we ever had a day where we didn't make huge strides." On Good Will Hunting, conversely, "We had a lot of days where we just didn't do s. Where nothing got accomplished." Hollywood stars are necessarily more miserly with their time than folk who don't yet own Oscar statuettes. "And our wives would ask us what we got done at the end of the day," he laughs.

It had been 15 years since Damon had settled down to a meaty writing project, and Krasinski had never attempted a fully-fleshed narrative, spiced with speeches from a wise old Hal Holbrooke-ish character (wisely cast with Hal Holbrooke) and one-liners from a punchy Frances MacDormand. "I hadn't been writing in that wonderful, selfish way where there's no green light on a movie," says Damon. "When the whole windmill part started to fall apart, my wife said, 'Even if you don't make this movie, you've had the greatest time. You've woken up to this thing that you thought you were still doing, but really weren't.'"

"YOU END UP SEEKING OUT PEOPLE FROM BACK HOME BECAUSE THEY UNDERSTAND YOU."

As in any writing foray, there're the pitfalls of structural rot, plot splutters, tinnital lines and character arcs so brittle they fracture at the touch of human speech. Promised Land has none of that. It is very much a writerly film, but also an actorly one in that its animating spirit is to supply Damon and Krasinski with roles they wanted to play.

"The idea of a man living his life one way and trying to figure out if that's the way he should be living it, there are tones of something like that," says Krasinski, whose favorite movie is Sidney Lumet's The Verdict. "The Kazan movies were really important to me," he adds. "On the Waterfront, Wild River and all those movies are about these characters and the struggle they're going through. They weren't beating you over the head."

This actor's taste for inner turmoil, for the staged riot of hamartia and third-act twists, infuses Promised Land's script. But the risk in empowering the inmates—as anyone who's read a latter day JK Rowling novel knows—is that you invite bloat. An expository town meeting scene ran to 15 pages in the shooting draft.

"It would've been 25 minutes [on film]," says Krasinski.

"If anyone paused for a second, yeah," says Damon.

"If you weren't doing a Mamet play."

But even a ruthless hand on the delete key won't make a script take flight. You need thunderclaps. Brainwaves. The electric tang of inspiration. Like when it occurred to Krasinski that Damon's character, a salesman for the natural gas business, ought to have been raised on a farm.

"We got to a point where we realized the obvious," says Damon. "That happens a lot. I remember writing Good Will Hunting, and we went and met with Terrence Malick in Austin. And the original end of Good Will Hunting was that Will and Skylar, the girl, leave Boston together. We're sitting there and we pitch the whole thing to Terrence Malick, and he's sitting there quietly having a cup of tea." Damon mimics a tremulous Southern accent: "'Well, ah think she should leave first, and he should go after her.' And Ben and I just looked at each other and said, 'We are the two dumbest human beings on the planet Earth. Of course that should happen.'"

IT'S HARDLY GOOD WILL HUNTING 2: HOW DO YOU LIKE THEM FRACKERS?

IN FARM'S WAY
Promised Land is a return to the character-driven movies of yore.

GOOD FENCES
Damon says his best move as a producer was firing himself as director and hiring Gus Van Sant.

Inspiration sometimes takes a long time to gestate. For years, there's been rumbling in the media about Damon and Affleck joining forces for a Whitey Bulger biopic, but Damon sounds fatalistic about a reunion. "It's tough because Ben and I talk about it. But now, his career is just in full... I mean, it's out in the orbit, man. It's unbelievable. I can't imagine the two of us being able to sit down and take the time to write something."

Time, for Hollywood stars as for everyone else, is always stamping its hooves in the background. As well as cowriting and costarring in Promised Land, Damon originally planned to make it his directorial debut. Work pressures tamped down that ambition, so he e-mailed the script to Good Will Hunting director Gus Van Sant, who accepted the canvas chair. "The best move I made as a producer was firing myself as director," laughs Damon. "Gus, incidentally, is John's favorite director."

Van Sant's sensibility—calm, intuitive, the camera lingering on a child's coloring book while the grown-ups haggle over Big Themes—creates the illusion of simplicity, even folksiness. "This was just pure storytelling," says Damon, who's worked with nearly every major director in the business, from Eastwood to Scorsese to the Coen brothers. He's something of a connoisseur. "I've always chosen by director," he says. "Maybe I should've been more selfish about roles, but the best chance you have of making good movies is partnering with great directors. So that's always been the way I've made my choices."

Van Sant's film, it's true, feels as unfussy as a drink of lemonade. While the character actors lick their chops over their lines, there's a goodly amount of weather, flags and landscapes molded by combine harvesters. And of people washing their faces in moments of mucked conscience. The movie is a morality play dressed in shots of Americana. "What it did for me was that every time I do a film now, I'm going to prepare for it as a director," says Damon. "I'm going to think about it as if I were directing it in detail, how all the choices influence everything in big and little ways."

Promised Land will make a grab at the Oscar ring—it comes out in the nick, under limited release on Dec. 28—but it's hardly Good Will Hunting 2: How Do You Like Them Frackers? For one thing, Damon is a restrained 42-year-old performer. The fuller mold of his face, the whisper of gray at his temples, the milkshed chic and dad jeans—this is a mature role. As a young actor, he says, "I was always angsting and trying to beat myself up and torture myself to feel things. Now I just relax and get out of the way, and it's right there."

He credits his kids for his evolution. Fatherhood, he says, has "filled me up emotionally. The only thing I can compare that to is that Christmas story. You know, How the Grinch Stole Christmas. At the end of the book there's that part where his heart grows five sizes or whatever. That's what it felt like being a father." A marination in family life seasons not only Damon's performance in Promised Land, but his approach to fresh projects. "If it's a big job, it means moving house. We have to figure it out as a family every time I go to work." Several years ago, scheduling conflicts prompted Damon to turn down the lead in Avatar. And while the Bourne movies inoculated his career by guaranteeing a windfall of box receipts, the future isn't so certain without a blockbuster action franchise. "Now I don't have that, so I wonder," he says. "It's tough. If it's all superheroes... there's gotta be something for me."

"IT'S VERY SCARY TO BE GOING THROUGH A TRANSITION LIKE I AM."

Movies like Promised Land—with a diffident budget and a yen for storytelling—continue to disappear in a fusillade of CGI ordnance. Damon's next film, a Steven Soderbergh picture about human cockatoo Liberace, is releasing next year not in theaters, but on HBO. "We couldn't get the money traditionally from the feature world," says Damon. "Steven said to me, 'If we tried to make The Informant! now, we wouldn't get the money.'"

Krasinski, too, is mindful that there's a change of scene ahead. "It's very scary to be going through a transition in your career like I am now," he says. "And the fact that [Promised Land] is coming out right when the show's ending... it's weird." He holds no illusions that The Office has welded Jim Halpert indelibly on his résumé, and on his life. "I wouldn't be so pretentious as to say, 'I'm ready to play a heroin addict!' Or, 'I'm ready to do Philadelphia!' I'm sure I've been typecast," he admits. "I'm honored to be. Being on The Office is one of those things you don't try to run away from. You try to hold onto its pant leg as much as you can. I think it's absolutely time to end the show, but it's given me everything."

Damon, too, is grateful for his breaks. "I feel lucky just to be here. I remember George Clooney said to me when we were doing Ocean's Eleven, we went out and had a drink one night, and he said, 'If you can survive 10 years in this business, you've really done something. If you have a 10-year career, that is unheard of.' A few years ago I sent him an email saying, 'We did it!'" He laughs. "I guess we're probably on borrowed time at this point."

Krasinski, too, is philosophical. He's got two other scripts in the works, and while he's not turning down any Halpert-esque nice-guy roles, he's determined to dig deeper. "I'm more engaged in playing people with conflict," he says. "This is who I am."

But the immediate task is to put Promised Land in front of the 3-D-queasy masses, hoping that it coaxes them from their jaded shells. At a private screening in the creamy leather depths of the Revere Hotel, Krasinski watches the movie with his family, friends and a light sprinkling of Boston journalists. After the (unfeigned) applause, he takes the stage to field questions, gracefully lobbing back the answers. In character with his most famous role, he gives them a bashful spin. "There were a lot of pinch-yourself moments during this," he smiles. "One's happening tonight."

In the lobby bar, Krasinski's parents, brother and sister-in-law chat about Thanksgiving arrangements while he patiently banters with fans. A stunning woman slips him a refill of sauvignon blanc before leaning in for a snapshot. Reporters cast about for flattering, deferential observations about the script. In a month, Krasinski's words will be echoing from theater sound systems around the country. In a month, the Academy lets slip the dogs of Oscar season.

If this, like Damon says, is indeed borrowed time, then it feels like time well-spent. ✖✖✖

WHO'S THAT GIRL?

LOOKING FOR THE WOMEN WHO INSPIRED BOSTON'S PUBLIC ARTWORKS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF / ILLUSTRATIONS BY BRIAN RASZKA

I WAS SITTING IN THE LOBBY OF THE FOUR SEASONS HOTEL, CHATTING WITH A FRIEND WHO WORKS THERE, WHEN IT FINALLY OCCURRED TO ME TO ASK.

"WHO'S THAT IN THE PORTRAIT?"

I'D WALKED PAST IT COUNTLESS TIMES. IT'S A PAINTING OF A YOUNG WOMAN WHO LOOKS A BIT LIKE LADY MARY ON DOWNTON ABBEY, AND JUDGING BY HER CLOTHING AND HAIRCUT PROBABLY LIVED IN THE SAME ERA (CIRCA WORLD WAR I AND INTO THE 1920S). SHE STARES FROM THE CANVAS, THE RIGHT SIDE OF HER FACE LIT, WITH A JAPANESE-LOOKING PRINT BEHIND HER AND ONE HAND RESTING LANGUOROUSLY ON A TABLE. HER SHAWL EXPOSES A MILKY WHITE SHOULDER AND HER EXPRESSION IS IMPASSIVE. IF SHE WERE ALIVE TODAY, SHE MIGHT BE ONE OF THE WELL-TO-DO WOMEN WHO ARE PART OF THE SEE-OR-BE-SEEN SET OF THE HOTEL'S BRISTOL LOUNGE, OR WHO CHAIR THE CHARITY GALAS HELD UPSTAIRS IN THE BALLROOM. NO ONE WOULD MISTAKE IT FOR A JOHN SINGER SARGENT PORTRAIT, BUT THERE'S SOMETHING ARRESTING ABOUT IT NONETHELESS. IT NEVER FAILS TO CATCH MY EYE.

"I DON'T KNOW," MY FRIEND SAID. "I'VE never really thought about it. I could try to find out."

So she asked the hotel's in-house designer and e-mailed me: "OK, so the painter is Frederick Andrew Bosley. And apparently a bunch of guests—celebs included—have tried to buy it from us."

Bosley (1881-1942) was a class of 1906 graduate of the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, and a moderately successful painter of portraits and landscapes. A New Hampshire native, he lived and worked in the area, upping the likelihood that the woman in the painting was also a local. Bosley served as director of the department of painting and drawing and advanced painting at the Museum School for 18 years, and Skinner Auctioneers & Appraisers has sold his work for as little as $558 and as much as $5,925.

My friend at the Four Seasons e-mailed again to say that the painting has hung in the lobby since the hotel opened in 1985. It was purchased by Frank Nicholson, the world-famous interior designer known for his work on luxury hotels. The hotel's present general manager, a crisp Brit named Bill Taylor, said, "Though we can't name names, a major music maestro has tried to purchase that painting for the past 27 years. Of all the incredible artwork around the world that he's seen, it's one painting that he's always wanted to own."

None of which answers the fundamental question of who the subject of the painting was. A student or relation of Bosley's? The daughter or wife of some rich Back Bay arriviste? Through former Four Seasons GM Robin Brown, I contacted Nicholson, who could recall only that he purchased the painting at either the Vose or Childs galleries, and little more.

"It's one of a thousand paintings he's put in hotels around the world," Brown said, "and it was over 30 years ago."

Still, it got me thinking about other depictions of women we walk past every day without ever stopping to consider who they were, or why they merited a measure of artistic immortality. First to mind was the statue of Harriet Tubman in the South End—but no one gets past grade school without learning her importance in fighting slavery. Then there's the equally familiar Boston Women's Memorial on the Commonwealth Avenue Mall depicting three influential female authors—Abigail Adams, Phillis Wheatley and Lucy Stone—though I doubt most people have ever heard of Lucy Stone, the first Massachusetts women to graduate from college, or realize that Wheatley was the first published African writer in America. So I decided to explore other artworks depicting women within a few blocks' radius of the Four Seasons. Perhaps their stories would be less shrouded in mystery.

ACROSS THE STREET, IN THE PUBLIC GARDEN, is the Triton Babies Fountain. The central sculpture is a bronze of a cherubic-looking child sitting astride another. When it's operating, the water splashes around them and they look as delighted as kids playing in a sprinkler on a hot summer day (although they're named for the son of Poseidon). The models, however, were actually little girls, the daughters of artist Anna Coleman Watts Ladd.

While it's notable that it was the first statue by a female artist to be located in the Public Garden, what's more interesting is how it got there. Ladd lived and worked in Massachusetts, but the sculpture was exhibited in the 1915 Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco, where it took the fancy of Mrs. Boylston Beal. The Beals lived at 108 Beacon St., and she purchased the sculpture and had it installed in the park across from her house. Beal and Ladd may even have known each other, as Beal also owned an estate called Clipston Manor, in a private oceanfront enclave called Smith's Point in Manchester-by-the-Sea, where Ladd had a studio. In 1924, the statue was relocated to its present site, on the Charles Street side of the park.

"It's one of the most playful pieces in the Public Garden," says Karin Goodfellow, director of the Boston Art Commission, and herself an artist. "You don't see that many children depicted in our public art. I think kids like seeing it. It's really engaging for the public."

"THERE'S SO MUCH FORGOTTEN HISTORY."

On a more somber note, a few blocks away, flanking the State House, stands a pair of statues depicting women in 17th-century garb. One is Anne Hutchinson, the other Mary Dyer. Hutchinson's statue was done in 1922 by Cyrus Dallin (probably the only major sculptor to have competed in archery in the 1904 Olympics), while Dyer's was done by fellow Quaker Sylvia Shaw Judson in 1959. Both 17th-century women were proto-feminists and religious dissenters who ran afoul of the Puritan settlers and were banished from Boston.

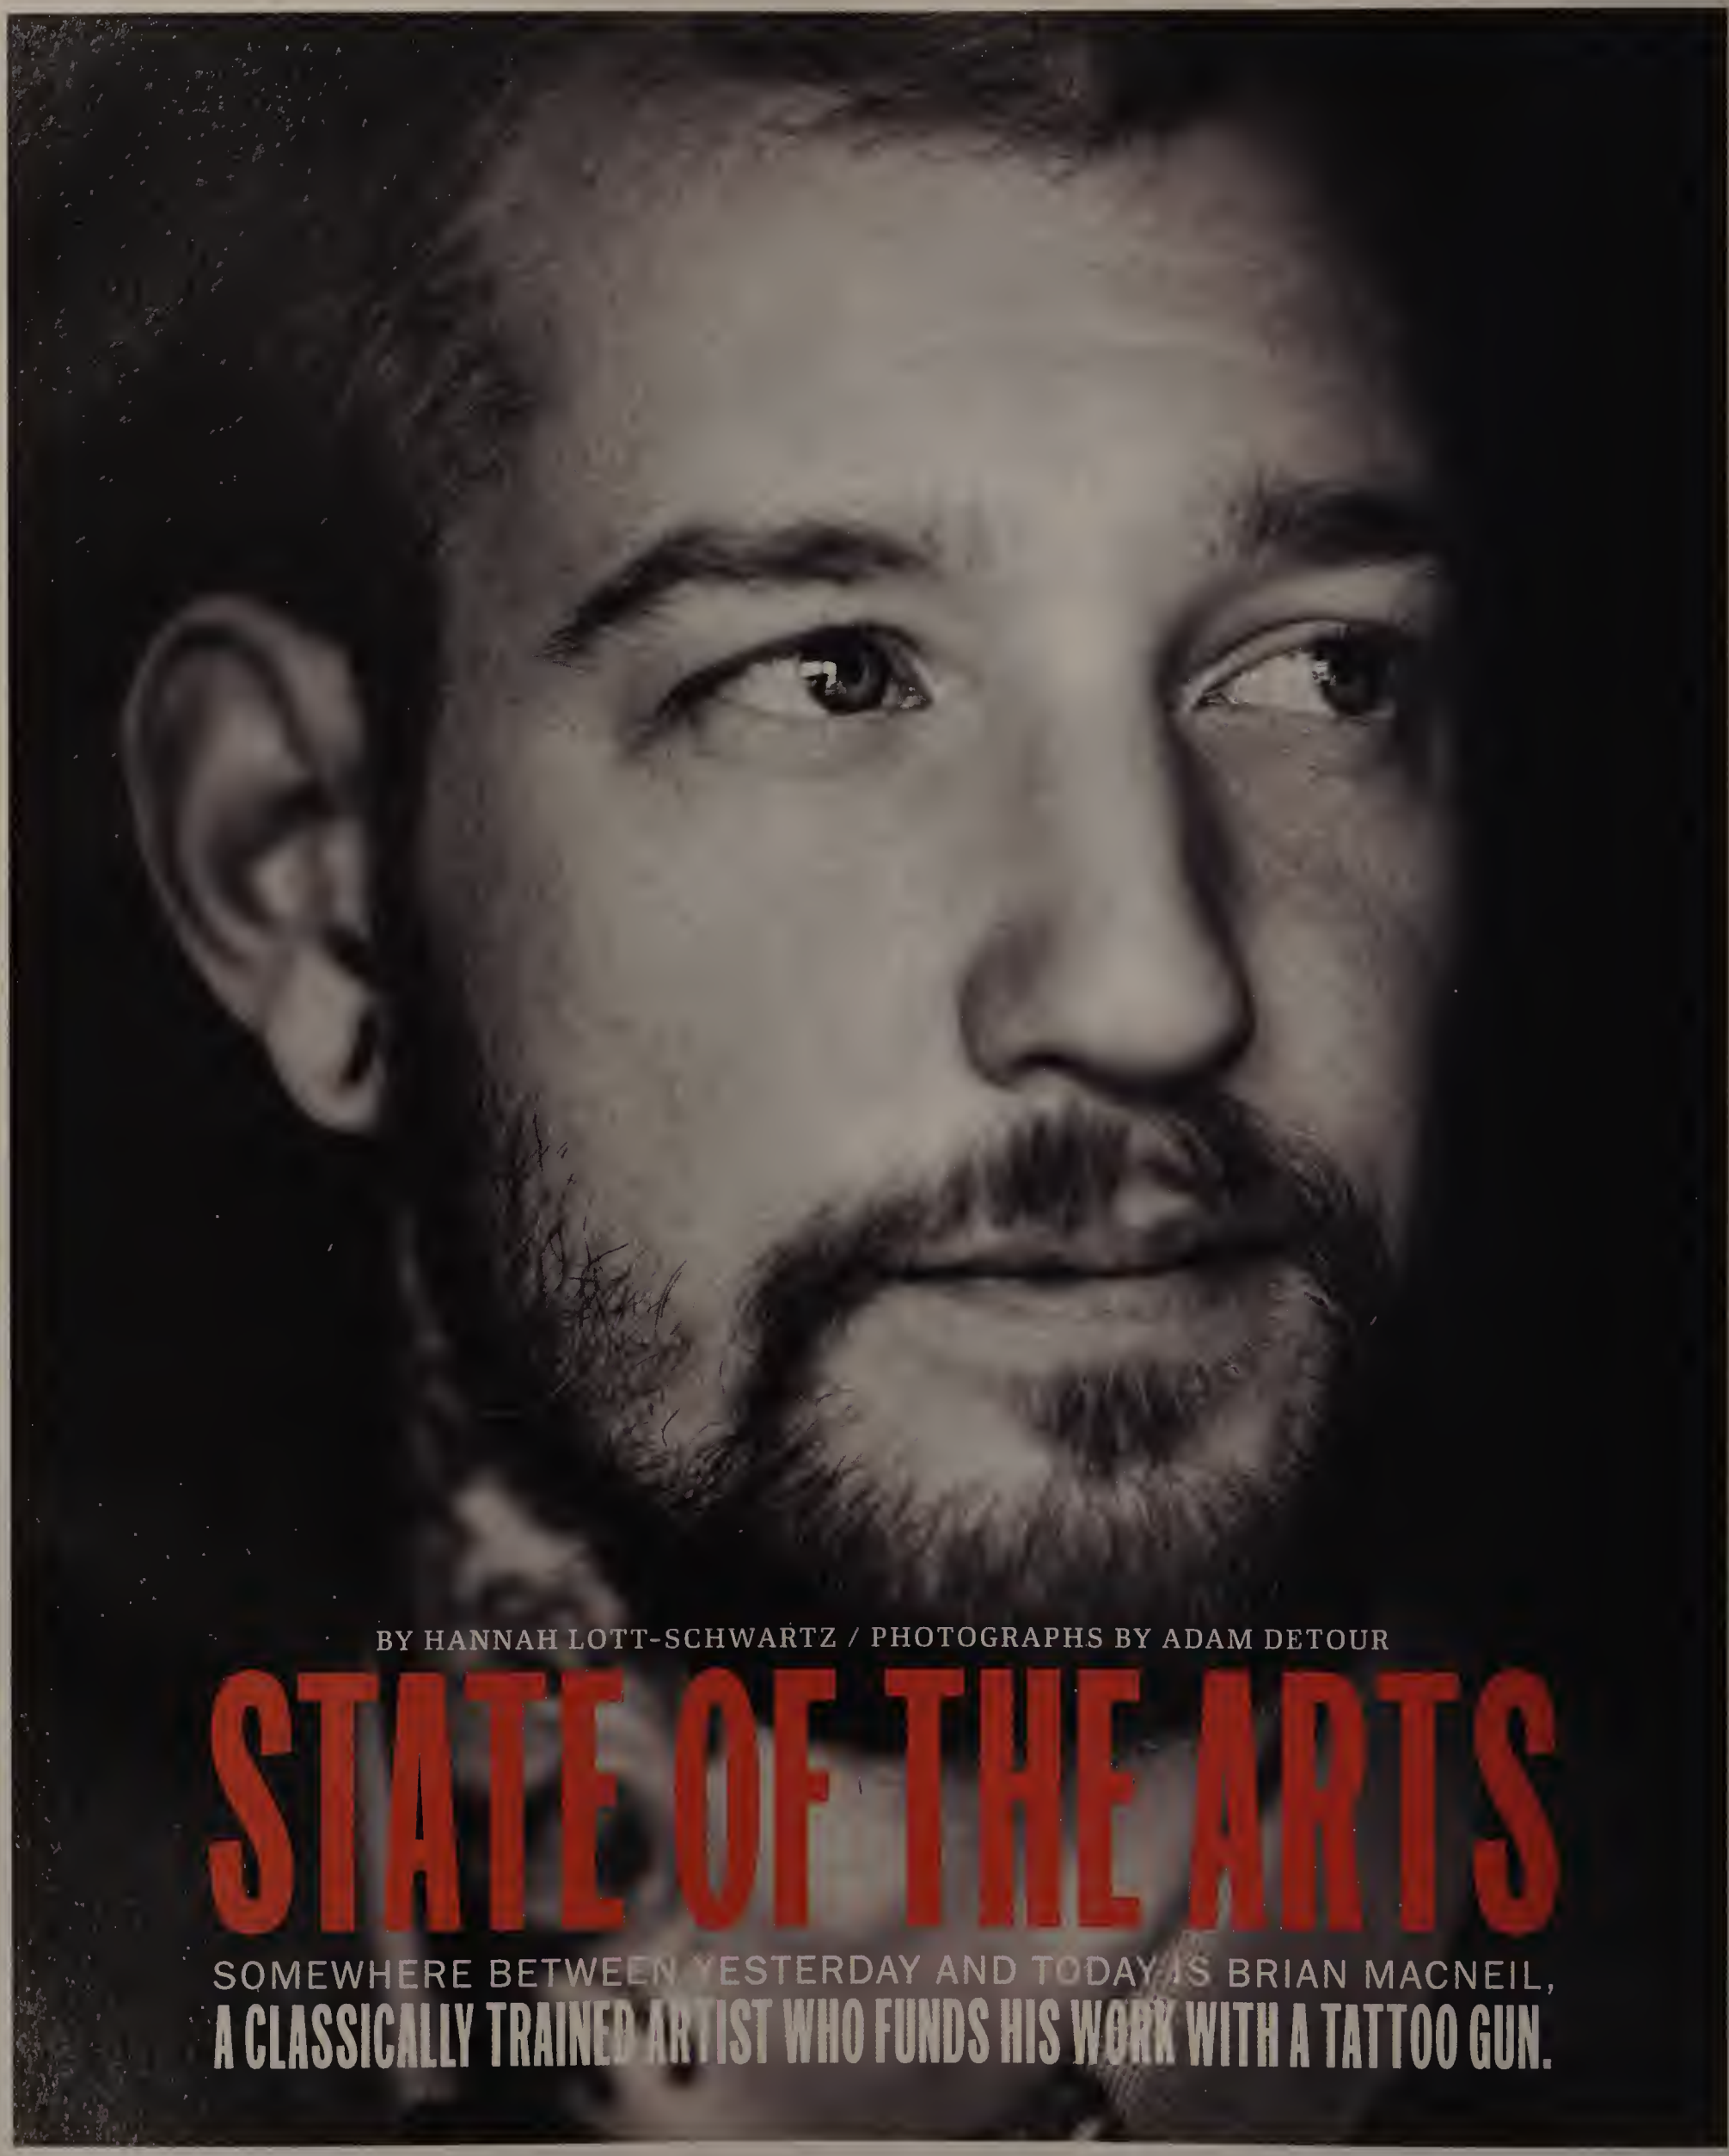
"I think it's great to look at Anne Hutchinson and Mary Dyer," says Goodfellow. "There's so much forgotten history in Boston, and people walk by these statues but don't know the stories they're meant to tell. Not only are they important and relevant, but they also say something about the times in which the artwork was created, what the people in those times thought was important to remember."

Hutchinson, exiled from the Massachusetts Bay Colony for heresy in 1638, fled to what later became Rhode Island, and then resettled in the present-day Bronx, where she and her household were massacred by a local tribe. She is now probably best remembered for lending her name to one of the most exasperating roadways in the Northeast: The Hutchinson Parkway. Her friend Dyer, however, was more defiant. Although repeatedly banished by Governor John Winthrop, she insisted on returning to visit imprisoned friends and to appeal her sentence. The result was that in 1660, she was hanged on the Common for refusing to recant her heretical views... probably in the same spot where you've seen college students playing Frisbee.

"We forget a lot of the complex history of Boston," Goodfellow points out. "Some of the less flattering stuff, it's a good reminder of that, and of the struggle that people went through to live here. People are a lot more familiar with the nearby monument to the 54th Regiment, and it's notable that we don't have a lot of female subjects of art. It's vitally important to know that there were a lot of female actors in these dramas as well."



Speaking of which, down Park Street and around the corner from the State House on Tremont Street is the Granary Burying Ground, the final resting place for such seminal figures as Samuel Adams, John Hancock and Crispus Attucks. Barely a tour bus goes by that doesn't also mention another name on a gravestone there. Mother Goose, tourists are repeatedly told, is interred near the memorial to Ben Franklin's family. It's become so ingrained in local lore that people routinely accept it as fact.

Except that it isn't. While there are two women named Goose buried there—both the wives of a wealthy landowner named Isaac Goose—neither wife number one (Mary) nor wife number two (Elizabeth) could possibly be Mother Goose, although Elizabeth's son-in-law did publish a book of her songs for the nursery (which probably gave rise to the popular fallacy). In fact, many of the stories attributed to Mother Goose predate the ladies buried in the Granary, and even the term "Mother Goose" was in use in France as early as a century before.

Of course, there are countless other examples of local monuments and art dedicated to female figures whose identities have been lost or forgotten over time (the Dorothea Dix Fountain near Faneuil Hall, for example). But Boston is a city that cherishes its history. Popular opinion—and who controls the purse strings and the priorities of a particular period—determines who ends up on a plinth. Who we enshrine in paint and stone says a lot about us as a culture.

So perhaps someday it'll be Honey Boo Boo perched, anonymously, above a fountain. Perhaps short memories can be a blessing, after all. ×××

STATE OF THE ARTS

SOMEWHERE BETWEEN YESTERDAY AND TODAY IS BRIAN MACNEIL, A CLASSICALLY TRAINED ARTIST WHO FUNDS HIS WORK WITH A TATTOO GUN.

BRIAN MACNEIL SPEAKS OF ART IN THE SAME WAY A MAN MIGHT SPEAK OF A LOVER.

"WHEN YOU'RE DRAWING A BORING TREE FOR FOUR OR FIVE HOURS, YOU START TO SEE HOW INTERESTING IT IS," SAYS THE 32-YEAR-OLD. "YOU START TO REALLY LOOK. IT BECOMES ALMOST MEDITATION. NOW I SEE THE WORLD DIFFERENTLY. IT'S MORE OF AN INTIMATE THING. AND IT ISN'T ABOUT MAKING THE ARTWORK THEN — IT'S REALLY ABOUT WHAT'S HAPPENING."

Represented by the Royal Gallery in Providence, R.I., MacNeil teaches portrait painting and drawing workshops at the Academy of Realist Art in Boston. This year, he also began coaching students through the core program, which graduates in difficulty from copying master drawings to three-dimensional forms. Though his experience touts otherwise, this Boston native is more mutt than purebred. MacNeil works full-time at Regeneration Tattoo in Allston, has stretched ears, and is inked from neck to foot.

Though there's been some crossover with classical and tattoo art in MacNeil's life, he has deliberately kept them separate. "In my mind I had to choose one or the other: Am I going to be a tattoo artist? Am I going to be a fine arts painter?" he says. "I felt that if I spread myself too thin, I won't be great at either."

His history with each form runs deep, and he's regarded highly in both worlds. "My first impression [was] that this guy is an artist that tattoos as well," says Edwin Marquez, who, as a fellow tattooer at Regeneration, helped bring MacNeil to the shop. "He's just on another level."

Michael John Angel, who was MacNeil's teacher when he studied at the Angel Academy of Art in Florence, Italy, agrees. "Brian immediately showed himself to be an extremely talented student," says Angel. "He's one of the exciting new generation that is working at bringing representationalism into the modern world, saying new things with an old language."

At the moment, MacNeil has to fight more for his paintings than his tattoos, largely due to demand. "A lot of people equate photos to realistic paintings. They feel like there's not much of a purpose for it," MacNeil explains. "But it's not photographic at all. I can look at a photo, and it can be representative of life, almost exact, but I'm not fooled. But I can look at a painting," he adds, "and there's something about it, an essence, a sense of volume that tricks my mind, that tricks my eye into believing that it could be real for a split second."

When MacNeil was a kid, his mom would drop him off at the Museum of Fine Arts on summer days. He spent most of the week there, copying paintings and statues late into the afternoon until his mom picked him up after work. "That was my summer program," he says. "And I was fine with it. I loved it."

By the time he was 16, however, MacNeil had focused his artistic interest on tattoos, giving his first one—bad, he says—when it was still illegal in Massachusetts. Two years later, he moved to North Carolina for an apprenticeship that turned abruptly into a full-time gig. "They basically just threw me to the wolves," MacNeil says. "That's how I learned. I just had a loose base of understanding of tattooing before that."

He stayed for a year, learning the trade before making his way north again, stopping in Philadelphia for three years and then working as a guest artist at various shops in Delaware and New Jersey, biding his time until the trade was legalized in the Commonwealth.

But when that finally happened in 2000, MacNeil felt a pull elsewhere. "I had gotten a traveling bug. I went to Paris. I went to the Louvre," he says, where he saw the large-scale paintings that make up Europe's artistic landscape for the first time. "It was like the IMAX version of what I'd see here in Boston. That really kind of blew my mind." Drawn to paintings spanning the 17th through 20th centuries, MacNeil pinpoints the human aspect and specifically the presence of the Greek Ideal, which focuses on balance, as qualities that captivated him. "There also seemed to be more to it than I could actually see. There was a mystery to it that I was drawn to."

When he was accepted to the Angel Academy of Art in Florence in 2004, he'd been tattooing steadily at a shop in Plymouth for a few years. But for the next four, MacNeil spent nine months of the year in Italy producing and studying the classics before returning for summer-long tattooing binges, a separation that he maintained even after completing his study and moving back to the States.

"I WANT TO TAKE IT OUT OF THAT SNAPSHOT IDEA."

His commissioned paintings, however, began to feel stale. "I was just doing whatever [the clients] wanted, and it wasn't necessarily based in any artistic idea or thought," MacNeil says. Then last October, he joined the team at Regeneration, where he had more flexibility in his schedule to work on his practice, teaching and tattooing. Thus began his transition.

Shortly after starting at the Allston shop, he allowed the two forms some crossover. For example, during tattoo consultations, MacNeil helps clients understand why he makes certain artistic decisions. "With that same concept in painting, there are design elements that I like to take into consideration," he says. "The typical person and even the typical artist are more inspired by photography, so in their mind they'll just take a little snapshot. What I want to do is take it out of that snapshot idea and really compose an actual painting."

He got that opportunity when Marquez commissioned MacNeil to paint his wife's French bulldog. Titled "Count Frankie," the work depicts the smug pooch, eyes closed slightly as though he's enjoying a scratch behind the ears, dressed in 16th-century nobleman attire, and perched with his back to rolling hills and blue skies. The portrait has all the elements that MacNeil prizes in his painting—a mixture of landscape, still-life and portrait, of old and new, details of realism—but there's an added sense of sensationalism, reminiscent of his tattoos. "The family heirloom is the picture of this dog," says Marquez, adding that his wife started crying when presented with the gift. "Best s I've ever seen. I couldn't believe it."

THOUGH MACNEIL OFTEN WORKS ON as many as five pieces at a time, he's currently focused on one inspired by the hermit tarot card and Led Zeppelin. "I really like the idea of the journey of the hermit who's going out, maybe seeking knowledge, maybe seeking spiritual growth, and as he passes through town, he shares it and then goes off," explains MacNeil. After winning the Hudson River Fellowship—and spending two consecutive summers outdoors painting the skyscape every evening—MacNeil finds himself drawn to light in paintings and using that as a focal point to drive his story. Toying with light, MacNeil sets the scene at dusk, with the hermit's lantern illuminating his face from below. "It's that weird in-between. You don't know if it's the sun rising or the sun setting. It's up to the viewer to decide if they're going out for that journey or if they're coming back from it." ×××

Earth Angel

'Tis the Season More eloquent than a Hallmark greeting card, more unavoidable than the annual office flu, Frank Capra's 1946 classic It's a Wonderful Life offers the inspiring message that "No man is a failure who has friends." George Bailey, played by the affable Jimmy Stewart, is an impoverished banker about to throw his life away on Christmas Eve until an angel intervenes. The angel, Clarence, transports Bailey to a reality in which he never existed—a Christmas Carol update that's now even more familiar than the Scrooge yarn. Revisit this heartwarming story of the richest man in the world at the Brattle Theatre from Dec. 14–16. Amanda Furrer

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Arbitrage ★★ With the possible exception of Michael Douglas, is there anybody better at playing wealthy scumbags than Richard Gere? The star's '80s swagger has receded into a fascinating, recessive, silver-maned emptiness. Gere has gotten a second wind by starring as morally bankrupt characters, and he glides through Nicholas Jarecki's otherwise unexceptional Arbitrage with grace under pressure. There's a matter of a missing $400 million, which Gere's character hides from his accountant daughter (a robotic Brit Marling) while in the midst of negotiating a massive merger. The high-stakes, financial flimflams would be enough to sustain a more interesting movie, but unfortunately writer/director Jarecki has a weakness for 1940s melodrama, and Arbitrage's Wall Street shenanigans take a backseat to silly developments. Jarecki tries to vamp up the vintage plot turns with something close to outrage, as if he's shocked that there'd be anything untoward going on in the modern stock market. There's a retro-kitsch factor, including a couple of boldly drawn baddies, but the moldy developments collide with a more cheerfully corrupt 21st-century thriller. (In the suburbs.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Central Park Five ★★ ½ Ravaged by the crack epidemic, New York City in the late 1980s was a powder keg of racial unrest. Anyone around at the time will remember the case of a female jogger, savagely raped and beaten within an inch of her life in Central Park, and the five black and Latino teenagers convicted of the heinous crime. Fewer folks know that these boys were innocent. A serial rapist stepped forward and confessed in 2002, after the convicted had already served lengthy prison terms. PBS mainstay Ken Burns, codirecting with his daughter and his son-in-law, is an unlikely choice for such incendiary material, and the film feels weirdly muted regarding this gross miscarriage of justice. It's a polite, empathetic movie that contains a lot of valuable information but little anger. The crooked cops, overzealous prosecutors and reckless media sensationalists all get off easy, as the movie's focus is on sadness and not rage. I wish Spike Lee had directed it instead. (At Kendall Square.)

Cloud Atlas ★★ ½ Some people call it the best movie of the year; others say it's the worst. The truth is that Cloud Atlas feels like both at the same time. Directed by Wachowski siblings Lana and Andy, splitting duties with Run Lola Run's Tom Tykwer, this insanely ambitious film explodes David Mitchell's carefully constructed nesting-doll stories into a single, centuries-spanning continuum where past, present and future overlap, as do recurring themes of enslavement and escape. of the all-star cast keep popping-up, playing different (but sometimes oddly similar) characters in each disparate tale, often wearing elaborate prosthetic makeup that ranges from the sublime to the ridiculous—a turn of phrase that sums up Cloud Atlas in a nutshell. A lot of the time, this feels like D.W. Griffith's Intolerance by way of Zardoz. Yet the kitsch factor weirdly keeps with the picture's ardent, disarming sincerity. There's not a cynical moment in these three hours, and the actors throw themselves into their roles with wild, foolhardy abandon. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Flight ★★ The trouble with movies about addiction is that they all tend to be the same. There are only so many ways to run through the standard parabola of denial, rock-bottom, relapse and recovery before it starts to feel like déjà vu all over again. Denzel Washington stars as a hotshot pilot for a regional Georgia airline who responds to a fluke mechanical failure by inverting the plane in a daredevil move and saving the lives of almost a hundred passengers. Only catch is that he was smashed. It's a tremendous scene, but unfortunately the rest of this picture's bloated 139-minute running time follows Washington at his father's farmhouse, attempting to kick booze and drugs before a federal hearing that could land him in prison. He climbs on the wagon; he falls off the wagon. He climbs on the wagon again and then guess what happens next? He self-destructs over and over until it's eventually time for everybody to recite "The Serenity Prayer," so the movie can finally end. Rinse, wash and repeat. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Hitchcock ★ ½ Stupid and insulting, director Sasha Gervasi's cartoonish look behind the scenes at the making of Psycho casts Anthony Hopkins as the master of suspense, burying the actor beneath several tons of gooey prosthetic makeup and a ridiculous fat suit. It's like watching someone try to act with their head wrapped in silly putty. Not that it matters much, as Gervasi and screenwriter John J. McLaughlin can't be bothered to even feign interest in the actual nuts and bolts of Hitchcock's craft. They instead opt for a silly, tabloid farce that depicts the director as a creepy peeping tom living out his murderous sexual fantasies through imaginary conversations with serial killer Ed Gein (Michael Wincott.) Hitch gets it in his head that his wife Alma (Helen Mirren) is cheating on him with Danny Houston's pompous windbag, and the ensuing tiresome dysfunction comes complete with groaningly obvious inside jokes for movie buffs every five minutes or so. I'd rather be watching Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, and when was the last time anybody said that? (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Killing Them Softly ★★★ ½ Shot in New Orleans, Andrew Dominik's noir transplants George V. Higgins' Boston-based 1974 novel, Cogan's Trade, to a decimated, unnamed urban wasteland during the 2008 economic collapse. It's a deliberately small-potatoes tale of two numbskull grifters (Scoot McNairy and Ben Mendelsohn) stupid enough to knock over a poker game run by Ray Liotta's luckless mob flunky. Brad Pitt plays the out-of-town muscle brought in to clean up this mess, constantly haggling with a buttoned-up middleman (Richard Jenkins) who only wants to pay "recession rates." The majority of the movie consists of long-winded, profane conversations between lowlifes, with lofty campaign rhetoric from McCain and Obama droning on in the background. Dominik hits the political points with a sledgehammer, but the obviousness is a small price to pay for hearing Higgins' peerless dialogue performed by a magnificently scuzzy cast. In only two scenes, James Gandolfini nearly runs away with the picture as a repulsive hitman lost in a haze of hookers and booze. It's pungent and often mercilessly funny. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicity recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–style sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female songstresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throwaway one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (In the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel Silver Linings Playbook into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of "edginess." It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her police officer husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common, Fenway , Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Taken 2 ★★ ½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie cold-bloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (In the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2 ★★ ½ It's been five movies since the winsome, almost unwatchable Twilight, in which Kristen Stewart's Bella pouted through high school being adored by Robert Pattinson's sparkly vampire Edward, and the series has grown from mopey adolescent wish-fulfillment to full on gonzo camp. Even the fans don't seem to take it seriously anymore, and lucky for us neither does director Bill Condon, who plays the absurd final chapter for maximum silliness. The central love triangle is finally resolved now that werewolf Jacob has fallen in love (or imprinted) Bella and Edward's half-breed baby, the unfortunately named Renesmee. The preening glam rock stars from the vampire Vatican, led by a cackling Michael Sheen and the awesome Dakota Fanning are en route to claim the child, and most of the movie is everybody standing around explaining their superpowers. But all the endless droning pays off in such a spectacularly goofy, over-the-top showdown I damn near fell out of my chair laughing. Add a star if you're drunk. Subtract one if sober. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane

Suited for the Role

Planting the Seed

Few artists blend musical genres quite like the Roots. In 1987, the band, founded in Philadelphia by MC Black Thought and drummer Questlove, became artistic pioneers when they released an independent album that crossed the boundaries of hip-hop, soul and alternative. For more than 20 years, the band has toured with rap mainstays—Jay-Z, Nas, Common—making the Grammy-award winners a staple on the scene while maintaining their own course. Whether your fandom stretches back through the decades, or just since they became the house band for Late Night With Jimmy Fallon, see the Roots on Dec. 26 at House of Blues.

Heartbreak Motel

Chaise Malaise

On film, solitude is often depicted as a tumbleweed blowing down an empty street. In The Space in Between, however, photographers Stefanie Klavens, Daniel Feldman and Lynn Saville provide a new take on the theme of isolation. The group show explores the relationship between human beings and their environments by representing physical absence. Klavens captures brilliant colors bursting out of desolate, urban settings. Her photos imply that people were recently around, but leaves the question of where they are now unanswered. Make your presence felt at the Photographic Resource Center through Jan. 19.

WANG 'EM HIGH

There's Always Roughing It at the Ritz

Everybody wang-chunged the night away when the Wang Center celebrated its 25th anniversary like it was 1986. (And if you're too young to get the reference, it's worth a YouTube chuckle.)

Arriving guests were photographed next to a life-size cardboard cutout of honoree Joe Spaulding (the president and CEO), and cocktails took place in the lobby followed by dinner on the stage, dramatically decorated for the occasion.

Unusual for a charity gig, even the speaking parts of the program were entertaining. Like the presenter who pointed out that "Josiah A. Spaulding Jr. is a wicked long name," and the person who said that if it had been a roast, the line for the microphone would be too long. Then there were the lines written (in 12 hours) and recited by poet populist Toni Bee, using words provided by the City Spotlights Teen Leaders, who performed two songs: one of their own and one that Spaulding wrote back in his hippie days.

Among the high-octane crowd were board chair Scott Sperling and the lovely Laurene, the stalwart Elliot Surkin, glamorous Westonians Bill and Susan Poduska, arts benefactors Steve and Jane Akin, the entire Epstein clan—Bob, Esta, Jennifer, her handsome husband, Bill Keravuori, swanlike sister, Audrey Reny, and her equally handsome husband, Steven—advertising giant Jack Connors with the lovely Eileen, VC powerhouse Jeff McCormick and brunette bombshell Christine, and one woman wearing a cashmere cardigan with a marijuana leaf embroidered on the back (the first person to guess which grande dame that might be wins an Improper Bostonian T-shirt).

The evening's most entertaining exchange: the guy who said, "Nothing instills confidence like cold-weather camping," to which his friend said, "Yes, but you need the right gear, which Prada and Alexander McQueen don't make, so you can forget about your wife going."

Touchdown!

Despite the football theme, The Goal Post Gala—a "kickoff for a cure" to prostate cancer—was a helluva lot fancier than your average Super Bowl party.

Chaired by Patriots owner Bob Kraft and held at the Four Seasons, the event raised money in memory of eminent urologist Robert Krane.

The dazzling crowd included the stunning Diane Krane, her offspring, and her husband, Myles Slosberg, bright young things Scott and Jennifer Feldman, NFL Hall of Famer and keynote speaker Mike Haynes, political activist Bonnie Berger and her distinguished other half, Merle, CBS sportscaster Steve Burton, the devastatingly British Dr. Anthony Zietman, dashing haberdasher Gilbert Hickman III, more doctors than you could shake a thermometer at, a woman whose husband is more than 20 years her junior, and one person who bought a $16,000 piece of art glass for a cool $5K.

The award for the evening's most off-color remark goes to the man who said, "I'm not much of a football fan, but I do appreciate a tight end."

Idiots Say the Darndest Things

You couldn't help but smile upon arriving at the Children's Hospital League Gala. Unless you're freaked out by clowns because several of them greeted the guests as they arrived at the Seaport Hotel for the epic annual shindig.

The everyone who's anyone crowd included the likes of anchor babe Lisa Hughes and her husband, Mike Casey, party pair Penelope and Dan Fireman, the barrel-of-monkeys fun Lynne and Gary Smith, blonde bombshell Diana Peselman with the dashing Alex, unfairly attractive couple Julie and Michael Rand, the babe-a-licious Nancy Foster, international man of mystery Dan Andelman, the delightful duo of Wendy and Michael Simches, and one woman who blurted out, "This should be a karaoke party."

Not the most practical suggestion, considering the several hundred people who packed the ballroom for dinner, a live auction and a tear-jerker of a story with a happy ending from a 15-year-old a million times more eloquent than most adults.

The evening's most absurd remark was a toss-up between the man who said, "These days, it takes me longer to cut the hair in my ears than on my head," and the woman who said, "I was jogging the other day, and I swear to God a guy with an unlit cigarette stopped me to ask for a light." ×××

ORIGINALLY CRAFTED FOR THE HOLIDAYS

Named after the Holiday star, Stella Artois was first brewed as a holiday beer as a gift to the people of Leuven, Belgium. A golden lager in contrast to the popular dark ales of the time, its brilliant amber color illuminated holiday celebrations for generations thereafter. "Artois" acknowledges Sebastian Artois, the master brewer and owner of the brewery.
